Performance-related Additions (Yorkshire)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which district and unit general managers within health districts in the Yorkshire region received performance-related additions to their basic salaries in 1987-88; and if he will indicate the basis on which these payments were made.

Mr. Newton: The criteria for awarding performance-related pay to general managers were set out in a memorandum (PM (86)11) issued by the Department to health authorities in 1986. The scheme is designed to reward both short-term achievements and a sustained long-term contribution to the management of the authority. The payments made to individual managers are confidential between them and their employing authority.

Staff (Assaults)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects his Department's committee on violence against social services staff to publish its report; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will issue guidance to local authorities regarding the collation of statistics concerning assaults on social services staff; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what guidance he has issued to local authorities regarding measures to improve the working environments of social services staff in an effort to reduce the number of assaults to which such staff are subject;

(4) what guidance he has issued to local authorities concerning the training of social services staff in dealing with potentially violent situations; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he has issued any guidance to local authorities on the provision of adequate insurance cover for social services staff who may be subjected to assault during the course of their duties; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what guidelines he has issued to local authorities regarding the provision of appropriate counselling and support to social services staff who have been subject to assault; and if he will make a statement;

(7) if he will make additional resources available to local authorities to enable them to take steps to reduce the number of assaults upon social services staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department's advisory committee on violence to staff which is looking at staff in the health services and social security as well as in the personal social services is expected to report soon to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The issues that it has been looking at include monitoring incidents, staff training, environmental conditions, staff support and counselling. In 1987 the Association of Directors of Social Services published "Guidelines and Recommendations to Employers on Violence Against Employees", which give local authorities advice on the same issues plus insurance cover. The British Association of Social Workers has also published "Social Workers at Risk: The Prevention and Management of Violence" (1986) and is currently drawing up further guidance. Regarding resources each year, as part of the process of consultation leading to the rate support grant settlement, local and central Government officials discuss pressures on the social services in the PSS expenditure group. The problem of violence to social services staff has been among the subjects discussed in recent years. It is expected that this subject will again be covered in this year's expenditure group discussions which will lead to the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement, but I cannot at this stage anticipate the outcome of these discussions.

Old-age Pensioners (Kidney Dialysis)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if an old-age pensioner receiving kidney dialysis will be financially worse off when the social security changes come into force in April; and if he will list the payments which will be made under the new scheme.

Mr. Scott: Pensioners whose benefit entitlement on the introduction of the income support scheme would be less than their existing supplementary benefit entitlement will have their total benefit income maintained in cash terms. This protection will be enhanced by an average amount for those who will have to pay a 20 per cent. contribution towards the general domestic rate.

The payments for which a pensioner receiving kidney dialysis under the income support scheme may qualify are as follows:

The personal allowance—

£33·40 for a single person, or
£51·45 for a couple;

The severe disability premium—

£24·75 for a single person, or
£49·50 for a couple where both members qualify;

The pensioner premium—

£10·65 for a single person, or
£16·25 for a couple;

The higher pensioner premium—

£13·05 for a single person or
£18·60 for a couple.

Pensioners

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if pensioners who receive benefit on Thursday or Friday will receive one payment at the old rate on 7 April and 51 payments at the new rate, following the increase in the state retirement pension in the week commencing 11 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Payments of retirement pension in the week commencing Monday 6 April will be at 1987-88 rates, whether the pay day is Monday, Thursday or Friday. Pensions will be paid at 1988-89 rates during the 52 benefit weeks from the week commencing Monday 11 April 1988 to that commencing Monday 6 April 1989, inclusive.

Nuclear Installations (Cancer)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list data on the incidences of cancer among (a) workers in the nuclear industry and (b) citizens residing in the locality of nuclear plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The incidence of disease among specific groups of workers is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

In respect of persons residing in the vicinity of nuclear installations, a report entitled "Cancer Incidence and Mortality in the vicinity of nuclear installations, England and Wales 1959-80, (HMSO 1987)" was presented by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in the series "Studies on Medical and Population Subjects", (No. 51). The report was published on 27 March 1987; copies were placed in the Library.

Nurses (Recruitment)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there are any plans for a television advertising campaign to recruit nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are currently revising our strategy for national recruitment publicity for nursing; the use of television is being considered.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in which health authorities the implementation of call and recall cervical cancer screening has been delayed by concern about (a) the capacity of pathology laboratories to cope with the additional smears and (b) surgical capacity to deal with the cases which need treatment.

Mrs. Currie: We are not aware of any.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services with which district health authorities he has had discussions about the adequacy of the Exeter software used in the computerised call and recall cervical cancer screening programme; and what was the outcome of the discussions.

Mrs. Currie: The computer software for cervical cancer screening call and recall systems has been discussed with a number of users of that software, including district health authorities. Account is taken of those discussions as additions and amendments to the software are made.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities who did not start to implement a computerised call and recall cervical cancer screening programme by 31 March; and if he will give the reasons for the delays.

Mrs. Currie: In my reply to the hon. Member on 10 March at column 344 I stated that after 31 March we would publish a full list of district health authorities which had implemented computerised call and recall systems for cervical cancer screening. This information is being provided by health authorities and we shall publish a list when the information has been collected.

Generic Medicines

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether interested parties will be able to submit evidence to the study into the market for generic medicines in Britain to be carried out by Touche Ross management consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Yes. The consultants are making their own inquiries, but, in addition, anybody who has information which they think is relevant may write either directly to the consultants or to the Department, which will pass on any such correspondence to them.

Homoeopathic Medicine

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on his policy towards the use of homoeopathic medicine within the National Health Service; and what resources have been made available for (a) the current and (b) the forthcoming financial year to the regional health authorities for allocation to homoeopathic hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: Homoeopathic medicine is currently available within the National Health Service and this treatment will continue to be provided for as long as there are patients wishing to receive such treatment and doctors willing to provide it.

Information on the resources allocated to homoeopathic hospitals is not held centrally. Health authorities locally are responsible for determining priorities in all forms of care provided by the NHS and are in the best position to allocate resources accordingly.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing how many claimants of family income supplement pay rent only, rent and rates and rates only, broken down into two-parent and one-parent families at the latest date available.

Mr. Scott: Claimants for family income supplement are not required to provide details of their housing costs or tenure type, and information of the type requested cannot therefore be derived from data extracted from administrative records. However, it is possible to make some estimates from the family expenditure survey, although because of the small number of sample cases available it is necessary to combine several years' data. On the basis of the FES data for 1983-86 inclusive, 66 per cent. of family income supplement recipients appear to be tenants, 28 per cent. owner-occupiers and 6 per cent. non-householders. These proportions relate to two-parent and one-parent families combined, and if applied to the latest administrative information on family income supplement caseload (May 1986) would imply:

55,000 owner occupiers
15,000 non-householders.

For the two groups separately the proportion of tenants is very similar, but two-parent families contain a rather higher proportion of owner occupiers and one-parent families a rather higher proportion of non-householders.

Consultants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 1987 the number of consultants on maximum part-time contracts who have merit awards, giving the number in each category: at, A, B and C.

Mr. Newton: The number of consultants in England and Wales on maximum part-time contracts with distinction awards in 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, is as follows:

Level of award	Number
B	560
Total	2,121

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the National Health Service for the years 1979 and 1987 the number of consultants with full-time and maximum part-time contracts.

Mr. Newton: Figures for 1979 and 1986 are set out in the table. Comparable figures for 1987 are not yet available.

NHS Consultants (England): as at 30 September

	Full time contracts	Maximum part-time contracts
1986	6,611	4,668

Pharmaceutical Products

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the increase, in cash and percentage terms, on intramural expenditure on research and development of pharmaceutical products in the United Kingdom in each year from 1983-84 to 1986-87.

Mr. Newton: Information on research and development expenditure by the British pharmaceutical industry is contained in the annual report 1986-87 of The Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry at table 6 on page 35. A copy is in the Library.

Regional Secure Units

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many places are (a) planned and (b) available in each regional secure unit;

(2) how many places in each regional secure unit are not currently available for patients; and if he will give reasons for any discrepancy between (a) planned places, (b) existing places and places currently occupied;

(3) if he will list those regional secure units for which there are waiting lists for places; for how many patients; how long they have been awaiting admission; and where they are currently accommodated.

Mrs. Currie: Thirteen of the 14 regional health authorities now have permanent regional secure units (RSUs) in operation. The remaining region, South West Thames, proposes RSU provision which will function in association with several "close supervision" units already operating in existing hospitals.

Details of permanent regional secure units in operation are shown in the table. Figures relating to staffed and available beds are based on latest available information.

Region and location	Bed complement	Number of beds staffed and available
1. Northern
St. Luke's hospital, Middlesbrough	30	25
2. Yorkshire

Rubery Hill hospital, Birmingham	100	46
13. North Western
Prestwich hospital, Manchester (adolescent)	20	20
(adult)	88	44
	632	505

In addition to the details provided in the above table, the North East Thames region has plans to provide two further permanent RSUs, providing 62 beds, to complement the one already in operation at Runwell hospital; two further RSUs in the Oxford region, providing 26 beds, are due to be completed in 1988; and a second permanent RSU in the South Western region (30 beds) is also due to be completed at Glenside hospital, Bristol this year.

In most units, regions have decided to bring their bed provision into use on a phased basis as and when staff are recruited and resources permit.

We are awaiting the results of a research study which, together with other relevant evidence on secure facilities, will help us to take decisions on the eventual capacity and requirements of the regional secure unit programme.

Information on bed occupancy and waiting lists is not collected centrally.

Mental Nurses

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the conclusions of the sub-group of the Standing Nursing and Midwifery Advisory Committee in its examination of the role of the registered mental nurse; and when he expects the committee to report.

Mr. Newton: The Standing Nursing and Midwifery Advisory Committee considered at its meeting on 5 April a draft report, prepared by a sub-group of its members, on issues arising in mental illness nursing in the light of developments in services for mentally ill people.

An amended report will be considered at the next meeting of the committee in July, when it is likely that members will also discuss the form and timing of any advice they wish to offer to Ministers, especially about wider consultation.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the conclusions about the training of community psychiatric nurses of his predecessor's discussions with regional nursing officers; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Newton: Consultation with regional nursing officers has established that the number of mental illness nurses working in the community continues to increase as district-based services expand. There is an identifiable need to expand and develop education and training programmes to ensure an adequately qualified workforce to meet present needs and planned expansion.

Action taken includes discussion with the English national board which has already increased the number of centres where appropriate training can be conducted. It has introduced and is evaluating the use of part-time and distance learning to improve access to courses.

Community psychiatric nursing staff have increased from 1,083 whole-time equivalents in September 1981 to 2,532 whole-time equivalents in September 1986.

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy, where health authority assessments of the local needs of chronic severely mentally ill patients discharged since 1955 from mental illness hospitals have not been made, as distinct from existing patients' needs, to withhold approval of further reductions in mental hospital beds and of plans for the closure of such hospitals until assessments of their needs have been made and alternative services to meet such needs provided.

Mrs. Currie: We anticipate that the comprehensive mental illness services being developed by district health authorities, in accordance with current policy, will reflect the total range of local needs, including the need for hospital in-patient care on a short or longer term basis as well as alternative forms of care.

Chronic Psychotic Illness

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what opportunities for training and sheltered work are available for present and former patients suffering from a chronic psychotic illness in each health district (a) within psychiatric hospitals or units and (b) in the community.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information is not available centrally.

Industrial and Occupational Therapy

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the plans of each district health authority affected to replace the industrial and occupational therapy provision in the psychiatric hospitals proposed for closure by 1995.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the plans of each health district is not routinely collected centrally but I would expect that, where appropriate, the replacement of any existing service would be part of the new services developed prior to the closure of a psychiatric hospital.

Elderly Patients (Crewe)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultation he has had regarding the proposals for development by the Crewe health authority of a private nursing home or private trust company to care for long-term elderly patients.

Mrs. Currie: None.

Funding and Medical Staff Employment (Trent)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage change in (a) National Health Service funding in real terms and in cash terms and (b) employment of medical staff, from 1979 to 1988, in the Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: The latest available information for the hospital and community health services in the Trent region is shown in the table.

	Cash	Real terms[2]	Change
Percentage change in net revenue expenditure 1979-80 to 1986-87[1]	103·4	21·9	—
Percentage change in whole time equivalent medical staff[3] 1979-1986	—	—	19·9

[2] Adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator.
[3] Includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff.

Private Patients (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of private patients using pay beds in the Nottingham district health authority on the latest available date, and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Private patients using pay beds in the Nottingham District Health Authority 1979 to 1986

1980	15·5	1,359
1981	15·5	1,405
1982	14·9	1,400
1983	10·9	1,033
1984[1]	3·2	312
1985	3·7	285
1986	3·6	259

[1] The reduction results from the following:
(a) the closure of Nottingham general hospital pay bed wing during 1984.
(b) the withdrawal of authorisation from Nottingham eye hospital and Nottingham hospital for women.
[2] Excludes occupation of authorised pay beds by NHS patients.

Eye Tests and Dental Examinations (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) eye tests and (b) dental examinations took place in the Nottingham health authority in each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the eye tests which are carried out under the general ophthalmic service and the dental examinations carried out under the general dental service. These are the responsibility of the family practitioner committee. The following table gives the relevant available figures for Nottinghamshire family practitioner committee which includes the area covered by Nottingham health authority.

Nottinghamshire FPC

Year	Number of eye tests[1]	Number of dental examinations
1979	..	500,900
1980	..	538,660
1981	..	570,690

Year	Number of eye tests[1]	Number of dental examinations
1982	..	591,490
1983	180,578	591,810
1984	195,150	618,580
1985	199,724	635,560
1986	206,524	[2]652,660
1987	221,955	..

[1] Information is not readily available on eye tests before 1983.
[2] The Dental Estimates Board altered its presentation of statistics from a calendar year to financial year as from 1986-87 and this figure relates to the financial year.
.. = Not available.

General Practitioners (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the number of general practitioners in the area covered by the Nottingham district health authority in 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the corresponding change in costs.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is collected from family practitioner committees which are not necessarily conterminous with health authority boundaries. The number of unrestricted general medical practitioners in the area covered by Nottingham family practitioner committee (which includes Nottingham DHA) has risen from 403 at 1 October 1979 to 464 as at 1 October 1986, the latest date for which figures are available. Information about the corresponding change in costs is not available centrally.

Supplementary Benefit Claimants (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the number of supplementary benefit claimants in each of his Department's offices covering the Nottingham, North constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Nottingham, North constituency is served by the Department's local offices at David lane and Shakespeare street, although their boundaries are not conterminous.

The numbers of supplementary benefit claimants for the years requested are:

Date of count	Nottingham
	David lane	Shakespeare street
27 November 1979	6,674	9,204
2 December 1980	7,721	9,915

Staff (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of staff employed by each office of his Department in the Nottingham, North constituency for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The available information is in the table.

	Staff-in-post
	1986	1987	1988
David lane	146	153·5	156
Shakespeare street	177·5	183·5	187·5

The numbers above were the staff employed on 1 April each year. I regret that the information for earlier years is not available.

Nottingham Health Authority

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of (a) physiotherapists, (b) speech therapists, (c) radiographers, (d) chiropodists, (e) occupational therapists, (f) dieticians and (g) laboratory technicians employed by the Nottingham health authority in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: The figures are shown in the table.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the projected levels of funding for the next three years for the Nottingham district health authority, expressing year-on-year changes as a percentage in both cash and real terms.

Mrs. Currie: The Department issues resource assumptions and allocates funds to regional health authorities which then determine district health authority funding. In 1988-89 Trent RHA's revenue allocation was increased to £1,050 million; a 6·3 per cent. cash increase or 1·7 per cent. in real terms. The initial resource assumptions for 1989-90 show a further real terms increase of between 1·5 and 1·7 per cent.; a revised assumption for 1989-90 and an assumption for 1990-91 will be issued in due course. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Trent RHA for information on funding for Nottingham district health authority.

Examinations, Operations and Beds

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current waiting lists for (a) examinations, (b) operations and (c) beds in each specialty in each hospital in the Nottingham health district.

Mr. Newton: The available information, for 31 December 1986, is given in the table. It should be noted that in certain specialties a clinician may maintain a waiting list which is common to more than one hospital within a district health authority.

Bed Occupancy (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the bed occupancy rates in each specialty in each hospital in the Nottingham district health authority in 1987.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 24 March 1988 at column 211.

Cardiac Unit (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those who have made representations to him regarding a cardiac unit in Nottingham.

Mrs. Currie: We have received no such representations.

National Health Service (Leasing)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the use of leasing as a form of capital finance within the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: The National Health Service may employ leasing as a means of acquiring capital assets, but it should be used only where it represents best overall value for money to the Exchequer as a whole. Where leasing of capital assets is proposed the full costs of the leasing option must be shown to be lower than outright purchase, and the Department's and, in most cases, Treasury's approval is required. Leasing is not regarded as a form of additional capital finance for the National Health Service.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek powers to prevent community health councils from using public money for party political purposes.

Mr. Newton: Community health councils are established and funded by regional health authorities to represent the interests of the public in the Health Service. A community health council is independent both of the health authorities and the Department in the way in which it goes about its task. A community health council must, however, remain within the law and is accountable to the regional health authority for the way in which the funds have been used. If my hon. Friend has evidence of the misdirection of community health council funds to party political purposes I will arrange for it to be considered.

Housing Benefit Scheme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will name the 45 local councils listed in his Department's housing benefit reform implementation progress report as not being ready to meet the deadline of 1 to 4 April for the implementation of the new housing benefit scheme;

(2) if he will name the local councils which indicated in their replies to his Department's survey, "Housing Benefit Reforms April 1988: Progress on Implementation — Progress Report Form A", that they expect problems and delays with their computer software;

(3) if he will name the local councils which indicated in their replies to his Department's survey, "Housing Benefit Reforms April 1988: Progress on Implementation — Progress Report Form A", that they expect problems and delays in training staff;

(4) if he will name the local councils which indicated in their reply to his Department's survey, "Housing Benefit Reforms April 1988: Progress on Implementation — Progress Report Form A", that they expect problems and delays in converting existing cases to the new housing benefit scheme;

(5) if he will place in the Library the detailed responses from each local council replying to his Department's survey, "Housing Benefit Reforms April 1988: Progress on Implementation".

Mr. Portillo: I have placed in the Library a summary of the responses received to the questionnaire issued to local authorities by the Department in January of this year. It is not our practice to publish correspondence with individual authorities.

Cigarettes and Tobacco (Regulation)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to follow the policy of the World Health Organisation on the regulation of cigarettes and tobacco.

Mrs. Currie: The World Health Organisation recommends that Governments should adopt a full range of policies on cigarette smoking and tobacco consumption. The Government have a comprehensive policy including restrictions on tobacco advertising and sponsorship, a ban on sales to children, controls on the composition of tobacco products and a programme on health education to make people aware of the dangers of smoking.

World Health Organisation

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which conferences held by the World Health Organisation were attended by officials from his Department in 1986 and 1987; and how many officials attended in each case.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the annual contribution of the United Kingdom to the World Health Organisation since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The United Kingdom's annual contributions to the World Health Organisation since 1979 were:

Year	£
1980	4,487,613·48
1981	4,286,214·93
1982	5,548,167·23
1983	6,512,426·45
1984	7,484,053·40
1985	8,956,020·70
1986	7,730,188·60
1987	7,298,735·75

The contribution is assessed in US dollars and the variations reflect, in part, fluctuations in the exchange rate.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the amount of money paid in rates or in lieu of rates by each district health authority in England for the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities' annual accounts for 1987-88 are not due for submission to the Department until the end of June 1988. Information for that financial year will be available in the autumn.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to correspondence sent to him by the hon. Member for Gower dated 21 January with regard to Mr. Harris and his cataract operation.

Mrs. Currie: I wrote to the hon. Member on 29 March.

Nurses

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses are currently employed by health authorities in England; and how many are undertaking further training to improve the scope and standard of their skills.

Mr. Newton: There were 236,800 whole-time equivalent qualified nurses and midwives employed in the NHS in England at 30 September 1986.

Information supplied by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting showed that about 10,000 qualified nurses and midwives entered some form of post-basic nurse training during the year ended 31 March 1987. Details are:

	Numbers
Midwifery, District Nursing and Health Visiting	4,830
Teachers training	1,180
Other Post basic training	3,880

In addition, an unknown number would have received further training organised by individual health authorities and in-service training.

Whitley Hospital, Coventry

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if following the decision to close the Coventry Whitley hospital, he will publish in the Official Report the letter from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) of 16 March 1988, to the Coventry district health authority about its duty to have regard to the particular circumstances of each elderly individual whose care provision will be transferred from the hospital consultants to the local housing association.

Mrs. Currie: The following is the text of the letter to the chairman of Coventry health authority.

"As you know we have been considering your proposals for the future pattern of services in Coventry and in particular the plans for the Whitley Hospital. We have weighed the arguments very carefully and have concluded that the proposals should proceed. We are satisfied that the proposals are in the best interests of patients and will allow more effective and efficient use to be made of health care resources in Coventry. In developing your plans for collaboration with the local housing association for the care of those elderly people not requiring consultant oversight in hospital, you will need to take into account the particular circumstances of each individual likely to be concerned.

In agreeing to these proposals I hope you will bear in mind our concern that patients should not be compelled to transfer from NHS beds to a fee-charging home unless they have indicated their willingness to do so with a clear understanding on their part of the arrangements by which such charges would be met. You will continue to provide for patients in NHS beds under consultant care, who will require continuing nursing care and who do not wish to transfer to the new facility on the Whitley Hospital site."

NHS Spending

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present level of spending on the National Health Service; and what was the comparable figure in real terms in 1978-79.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

	1978-79	1987-88 (estimated outturn)
Gross National Health Service expenditure (Great Britain)	15,687	20,789

Note:
Expenditure for 1978-79 has been revalued using the GDP deflator.

Patients (Physiotherapy)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to the treatment of NHS patients in need of physiotherapy continuing to be restricted to state registered physiotherapists.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to change the current requirement of state registration as a prerequisite for the employment of physiotherapists within the NHS.

Blood Donors (North Staffordshire)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for each year since 1983, what was the number of blood donors in north Staffordshire and the amount of blood collected from them;

(2) how many people have been employed in the blood transfusion service in north Staffordshire in each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether there are any delays in the collection of blood from donors in north Staffordshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret we do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of West Midlands regional health authority, which is responsible for the blood transfusion service in the west midlands, for advice on these issues.

Income Support

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown of the extra expenditure on income support for families with children in 1988-89, broken down into expenditure incurred by transitional protection and expenditure not incurred by transitional protection; and, in each case, how much of this expenditure is attributable to compensation for the 20 per cent. rates contribution, on the same basis as his reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East on 7 March, Official Report, columns 56-7.

Mr. Scott: Of the £150 million extra expenditure on income support for families with children in 1988-89, extra expenditure on transitional protection will be £20 million and that on structural changes £130 million.

Extra expenditure on income support for families with children in 1988-89 to compensate for the 20 per cent. rates contribution will be £80 million. This relates entirely to the structural effect. However, in calculating the amount of benefit payable at the point of change to income support, compensation for the rates contribution is also to be built into the supplementary benefit levels. But for this, the cost of transitional protection for families with children would have been reduced by £10 million and the total additional expenditure in 1988-89 reduced from £150 million to £140 million.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to undertake to estimate the number of disabled claimants by constituency who will receive a lower entitlement under income support than they currently receive.

Mr. Scott: The effects of the reformed structure of income-related benefits on all the various client groups, including the disabled, will be monitored. It will not, however, be possible to provide information on an individual constituency basis.

Family Credit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of the extra £220 million to be spent on family credit from April is attributable to the freeze in child benefit.

Mr. Scott: About £18 million.

Retirement Age

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to bring forward proposals for retirement ages and pensions following the review he announced in answer to the hon. Member for Dorset North (Mr. Baker) on 25 February, Official Report, column 295.

Mr. Scott: We cannot at this stage predict when the work we are doing on considering options for change in pension age will yield results. In carrying forward this work, we must also have regard to the proposed EC directive completing the implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women in statutory and occupational social security schemes which is currently under discussion.

Sight Tests

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates have been made of the reduction in numbers of people taking sight tests which will arise from the levying of charges.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 25 March 1988]: It would not be practicable to attempt any such estimate, particularly in the absence of information about possible charges for sight tests conducted privately under the proposed arrangements. However, on the basis of experience with the more competitive market already introduced for spectacles, we would expect charges to be modest; and since some 30 per cent. of the population, including the least well-off, will continue to be entitled to a free NHS sight test, we see no reason to expect a significant reduction in demand.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was Government spending on the hospital and community health services per household as a proportion of the average household income in 1978-79, 1982-83 and 1986-87.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 25 February 1988]: Gross expenditure on the hospital and community health services (United Kingdom) represented 4·5, 5 and 4·5 per cent. of average income per household in 1978-79, 1982-83 and 1986-87, respectively. However, as these figures are affected by changes in the number and composition of households, a more reliable indicator is expenditure per person which rose from £106 in 1978-78 to £198 in 1982-83 and to £249 in 1986-87.

TRANSPORT

Underground Trains

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trarsport (1) what discussions he has held with London Regional Transport about the introduction of rolling stock on the London Underground designed to reduce crime opportunities and increase passenger protection;

(2) what studies he has undertaken or commissioned into the design of underground train carriages so as to increase passenger protection against crime.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department maintains close contact with London Underground Ltd. on measures to combat crime on the Underground. Features to improve passenger security have been incorporated in the prototype trains built to evaluate the replacement stock to serve the Central line in the 1990s. These include alarms which allow passengers to talk to the driver and greater visibility between carriages. The trains will undergo passenger service trials later this year.

Autoguide Electronic Route Guidance System

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made with the Autoguide electronic roue guidance system.

Mr. Channon: I have today helped the private sector to launch its Autoguide demonstration scheme, which covers much of the Westminster area and the corridor to Heathrow airport. I have also issued a consultation document on the following stage on the project: the London pilot system. I have placed copies in the Library.

Both the demonstration scheme and the London pilot sysem are important steps towards a national commercial Autoguide service, which will make an important contribution towards keeping traffic moving and improving the quality of road travel.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rehvot (Bombing Incident)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Tel Aviv regarding the claim by the Palestine Liberation Organisation to have detonated bombs on 20 March in a bus shelter in Rehvot; and whether he will instruct the ambassador to convey the regrets of Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Israel about this terrorist incident.

Mr. Mellor: We have seen no report of such a claim.

Syria (Mr. Philip Habib)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has raised through the British interests section in the Australian embassy in Damascus Her Majesty's Government's reaction to the refusal of the Syrian Government to receive President Reagan's envoy, Mr. Philip Habib; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Iraq (Peace Initiative)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Baghdad regarding the public statement made there on 26 March by Mr. Yasir Arafat rejecting Mr. George Shultz's peace initiative; and whether Her Majesty's ambassador has made any representations to the Government of Iraq regarding this statement.

Mr. Mellor: The "Summary of World Broadcasts" edition of 29 March quotes Mr. Arafat as saying in Baghdad on 27 March:

"We are not against any peace initiative, but we are not ready to respond to any initiative that ignores the Palestinian people and their rights".

We have not raised this statement with the Government of Iraq.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Appeals

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average period of time for holding an inquiry into a planning appeal, from the date of the original planning application to the local authority to the commencement of the inquiry.

Mrs. Roe: For the 1,922 planning appeals decided in 1987, following public inquiries, the median time from the date of the planning application to the start of the inquiry was 54 weeks. It must be borne in mind that an appeal can be lodged at any time up to six months after the local planning authority's decision, or after the date by which that decision should have been made.

Tenants' Choice Interviews (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if Nottingham city council was informed of the tenants' choice interviews conducted in Nottingham in the current week; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what contact and co-operation his Department had with Nottingham city council prior to the setting up of research interviews with tenants on the sale of estates.

Mrs. Roe: A small sample of tenants in Nottingham, from estates selected in consultation with the city council's director of housing, are taking part in group discussions to identify factors which are important in a choice of landlord. The project is not concerned with the sale of these estates or of any other particular estates.

Rushmoor Borough Council

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Rushmoor borough council had a legal agreement, endorsed by his Department at the time of the transfer of the Greater London council housing stock, whereby subsidy will continue to be paid on the major technical repairs programme for the Prospect Estate at no cost to the borough.

Mrs. Roe: No.

Rating Reform

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis he will issue the capital allocation of £25 million for the preparation costs of the community charge which he announced on 24 March.

Mr. Howard: The £25 million capital allocations will be issued pro rata to adult population. Letters have been sent to each charging authority in England informing it of its individual allocation. A list of these allocations has been placed in the Library. Subject to parliamentary approval of the community charge legislation, the allocations will assist councils to begin preparing for the introduction of the community charge in 1990. Although authorities are unlikely to incur significant additional current expenditure in the financial year 1988-89, it is likely to be helpful for them to be able to begin preparations on capital projects such as the installation or adaptation of computer systems. These allocations show that the Government recognise the need for authorities to make an early start on these so that the collection of the community charge will run efficiently from the beginning. These early allocations will enable councils to plan sensibly for the operation of the new system, which will for the first time make them truly accountable to the people they serve.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those bodies that have made representations to his Department on the possible effects of the introduction of the poll tax on rural areas and on the services provided by local authorities.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 12 April 1988]: A summary of the 1,271 responses received by 31 October 1986, when the consultation period on the Green Paper ended, was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986. Since June 1987 my Department has received some 8,300 letters, the majority of which—about 6,100—are from private individuals. However, the letters contain a variety of comments on specific aspects of our proposals, or requests for further information, and for this reason do not readily lend themselves to an analysis of correspondents' views.

Rates

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projected rate increases for all counties, boroughs and districts in England for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The following is the available information for county precept increases and local rate increases in boroughs and districts in 1988-89:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grammar Schools

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many grammar schools are operated by local authorities; what was the figure for 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers of grammar schools maintained by local education authorities in England in January 1987 and in January 1979 were 152 and 254 respectively.

University Admissions (Ethnic Monitoring)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss proposals for ethnic monitoring in relation to admission proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Further to my reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 29 February 1988, at columns 404-5, the Department issued on 8 March its consultative document addressing the issues and options for consideration in the collection of ethically based statistics for students in further and higher education. The University Grants Committee was included among the bodies in the university sector to which copies were sent. In addition, as adumbrated in my previous reply, the Department has raised the question of the ethnic monitoring of university applicants with the Universities Central Council on Admissions, which is now considering the proposal in consultation with other interested bodies.

Research Centres

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek additional funding for setting up interdisciplinary research centres in 1989-90.

Mr. Jackson: Funding in 1989-90 for inter-disciplinary research centres and for the science base generally will be subject to review in this year's public expenditure survey.

Reception Classes

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he proposes to take to ensure that reception classes in primary schools are adequately staffed.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) on 15 March, at column 531.

Further Education

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning his plans for further education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: 362 responses have been received to the consultation paper. "Maintained Further Education: Financing, Governance and Law", from a wide range of local education authorities, colleges, educational and other organisations, and individuals.

Horniman Museum

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for the future of the Horniman museum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: We are urgently considering the most appropriate arrangements for the Horniman museum and will make an announcement as soon as possible.

Child Guidance Service

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he is developing for the future of the Child Guidance Service within inner London, in the light of the proposed abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 28 March, at column 273.

Supply Teachers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance his Department has given to local education authorities in Wales concerning the salary scales of supply teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for local education authorities to determine te pay of supply teachers within the framework set down in the "School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1987."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Welsh Language

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Attorney-General whether there are any plans to initiate a review of the use of the Welsh language in courts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government are committed to the principle of equal validity in the use of English and Welsh in court proceedings in Wales as provided for in the Welsh Language Act 1967. The Lord Chancellor will willingly consider any specific representations about the facilities for the use of Welsh in courts for which he is responsible, but a further general review is considered to be unnecessary.

Welsh Social Security Commissioner

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General what recent representations he has received concerning the Welsh Social Security Commissioner; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Since the closure of the Cardiff office of the social security commissioners on 4 August 1986 my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has received written representations on that subject from nine Members of Parliament, one peer and two members of the public, to which replies were sent explaining the reason for the closure and the steps taken to ensure that hearings continue to take place in Cardiff as necessary.

DEFENCE

Morocco

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restriction Her Majesty's Government impose on the use of British military equipment and weapons supplied to the kingdom of Morocco to ensure that they are used neither for external aggression against the Saharawi people nor for internal repression.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 14 July, at column 442.

Nuclear-powered Submarines

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear-powered submarines he expects to have been taken out of service by the year 2000; and what proposals he is considering for their decommissioning.

Mr. Sainsbury: On current plans 10 nuclear-powered submarines will have been taken out of service by the year 2000. Sea disposal of the entire submarine, land burial of the intact reactor compartment and piecemeal disposal of the reactor machinery in a deep disposal site to be developed by Nirex are options which are under consideration by the MOD but no decisions have yet been taken.

The safety and environmental implications of these options will, of course, form part of the Government's deliberations.

WALES

Inward Investment

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn of 21 March, Official Report, column 26, if he will give the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: The numbers of inward investment projects secured for Wales by county during the period 1 April 1983 to 31 December 1987 are shown in the following table. Figures for the years prior to the establishment of WINvest in April 1983 are not available.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the teaching hospitals in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Undergraduate medical and dental education is provided by the University of Wales college of medicine and the Cardiff Dental school on the site of the University Hospital of Wales. Clinical training is provided primarily at the University hospital of Wales, the Cardiff royal infirmary and Llandough hospital.

The postgraduate education of doctors continues through to the senior registrar grade and there are training posts in all the larger hospitals in Wales.

Green Pound

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to press for a devaluation of the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The European Commission proposal not to make any changes in the green pound in the price package for 1988-89 will be subject to discussion at the forthcoming meetings of the Council of Ministers. We strongly support the Commission's aim of removing all MCAs by 1992 and we have already made clear our commitment to press for the immediate abolition of our MCAs in the pigmeat sector.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department currently applies outside financial appraisals for straightforward regional development grant applications.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 12 April 1988]: No.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The response of West Glamorgan health authority to consultation on the recommendations of the perinatal mortality initiative report relating to the establishment of a regional perinatal intensive care service were received in May 1987. Together with the responses of other health authorities in Wales it has been the subject of detailed study and an announcement of the Welsh Office proposals, in the light of consultation, will be made as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the United Kingdom to ratify the convention establishing the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am glad to announce that the United Kingdom's instrument of ratification of the MIGA convention was deposited by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer at the World Bank's offices in Washington on 12 April 1988. Sufficient ratifications have now been received for the convention to enter into force. The United Kingdom has therefore become an original member of the agency and will play a full part in its formative stages. MIGA, which will encourage private investments in developing countries, principally by issuing contracts of guarantee against defined non-commercial risks, is a welcome addition to the World Bank group and we hope it will have a long and successful life.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of employment in (a) the coal industry in Scotland and (b) the electricity using industries in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: British Coal has about 5,000 employees in Scotland at present. In addition, roughly 1,000 people are employed on opencast and deep mining by subcontractors. There are also a small number working in licensed private mining.

There is no generally accepted definition of "the electricity using industries". Estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in Scotland in September 1987 by broad industry categories are given in table 1.5 of the March Employment Gazette, available in the Library of the House. A more detailed industry breakdown, from the 1984 census of employment, appears in an article in "Scottish Economic Bulletin" number 36, also available in the Library of the House.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each district council area in Scotland (a) the rate of support grant for 1987-88, (b) that figure expressed per capita of the population of the authority, (c) the rate support grant in 1978-79 in 1986 prices, (d) expressed as a sum per capita of the then population of the authority, and (e) the percentage difference between (c) and (d).

Mr. Lang: The figures show for each local authority the total and per capita amounts of rate support grant paid in 1987-88, the total and per capita amounts of rate support grant paid in 1978-79 expressed in 1986-87 prices, and the percentage difference between the 1978-79 and 1987-88 per capita figures. The GDP deflator is used to convert the figures for 1978-79 from cash to 1986-87 prices. The grant figures used for 1987-88 are based on the Rate Support Grant (Scotland) Order 1987. No adjustment has been made for grant penalties since they will be restored if authorities bring their expenditure down to guideline at outturn.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each district council area in Scotland those services on which authorities spend below the national average; and by how much.

Mr. Lang: This information is not readily available, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Arts and Antiques Squad

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to reconstitute the arts and antiques squad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for chief officers to take operational decisions about the deployment of the resources available to them. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the need for a specialist arts and antiques squad is kept under review, but that there are no plans at present to re-establish the squad.

Economic League

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidance to police forces concerning contacts with the Economic League.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We see no grounds for doing so.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now inquire into alleged connections between the Economic League and the police forces of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An inquiry was made by North Yorkshire police in March 1987 into allegations about the activities of the Economic League in that force's area. I am not aware of any other allegations about connections between the Economic League and the police. If the hon. Member has a specific case in mind, perhaps he would let me know.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advance there has been in making British law match more closely United Nations guidelines for legal sanctions on drug trafficking.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has, since 1964, been a party to the United Nations single convention on narcotic drugs 1961, which requires the application of stringent controls over the production, manufacture, distribution and availability of such drugs, with the aim of preventing their diversion to the illicit trade. In 1986 the United Kingdom ratified the United Nations convention on psychotropic substances 1971, which requires similar controls over a wide range of synthetic drugs liable to misuse. The provisions of these conventions are embodied in the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, as amended by subsequent modification orders, and its associated regulations. We are now participating in negotiations on a new United Nations convention against illicit trafficking.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what links have now been established between drug trafficking and terrorist activities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no direct evidence of such links in respect of terrorism directed against the United Kingdom or United Kingdom interests, but we remain alert to the possibility both at national level and in multilateral organisations such as Trevi.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rate of interception for illegal trafficking in drugs he treats as providing a reasonable indication of effective policing and an effective deterrent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to calculate an interception rate for covert illegal activity. But there are a number of indicators (for example, information over time about the availability, purity and street price of certain drugs) which chief officers can use to help them assess the effectiveness of their enforcement activities including their efficacy as a deterrent.

Law Officers

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration has been given to rationalising international law enforcement agreements so that law officers can have the same freedom of movement and operation on the people they are watching or pursuing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police officers may already follow suspects from one country to another when this appears to be necessary. The facilitation of international co-operation of this kind is one of the functions of the International Police Organisation (Interpol).

British Broadcasting Corporation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation; and what issues he hopes to discuss.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation in the immediate future. But, generally, we keep in close touch with the broadcasting authorities in order to discuss a wide range of issues.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to seek to give members of the public greater protection against rape and other crimes of violence in subways: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are strengthening the police and we have put before Parliament proposals which will increase certain penalties, strengthen existing controls over the possession of firearms and shotguns, prohibit the sale of specified offensive weapons, and make it an offence to possess a knife in a public place without good reason. Our current crime prevention publicity campaign is directed against the 4 per cent. of crime committed against the person as well as the 96 per cent. committed against property. These measures will help tackle violent crime wherever it may occur.

Drugs (Illicit Manufacture)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for control of the manufacture or sale of raw materials which might be used to manufacture drugs illicitly.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Proposals to secure closer international collaboration for this purpose are being pursued vigorously alongside other major enforcement measures included in the draft of a new United Nations convention on drug trafficking.

Psychiatric Patients (Voting Rights)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to revise the Representation of the People Act 1983 to take account of the difficulties experienced by voluntary psychiatric patients who are required to record an address, other than the psychiatric hospital, for voting purposes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Voluntary patients in psychiatric hospitals may register as electors in respect of any address with which they have been associated other than the hospital address. Guidance to psychiatric hospitals makes it clear that any former address is acceptable and that no voluntary patient need lose his vote for want of an address.

Brixton Prison (Deaths)

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of deaths (a) by suicide and (b) misadventure in Brixton prison since 1981.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Twenty verdicts of suicide and three of misadventure have been returned on inmates who have died at Brixton since the beginning of 1981. Three open verdicts have also been returned during that period on inmates who were found hanged at the prison, and the inquest on one inmate thought to have committed suicide there has yet to be held.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) at what time prisoners are locked in their cells for the night at each of the following prisons: Birmingham, Leeds, Pentonville, Manchester, Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs and Holloway;

(2) how many prisoners spent on average (a) 20 or more hours a day and (b) 23 or more hours a day in their cells in the most recent convenient week at (i) Birmingham prison, (ii) Leeds prison, (iii) Pentonville prison, (iv) Manchester prison, (v) Wandsworth prison, (vi) Wormwood Scrubs prison and (vii) Holloway prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The daily routine for prisoners may vary both within and between prisons and from day to day. The information, which has been collated locally by the establishments concerned, relates to the week beginning 20 March 1988.

Establishment	Average daily population	Numbers of prisoners who spent on average 20 or more hours a day in cells	Numbers of prisoners who spent on average 23 or more hours a day in cells	Time locked in cells for night

Firearms Certificate (Gwent)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the letter reference MLB/JD, dated 19 January 1985, from the prosecuting solicitor's office of Gwent Police Authority to an applicant for a firearms certificate, has been drawn to the attention of Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

EMPLOYMENT

Significant Private Sector Employers

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of significant private sector employers in the United Kingdom; and if he will indicate what definition of significant his Department uses for this purpose.

Mr. Fowler: There is no statistical definition of "significant employers" and different firms will be significant in different contexts.

Training Schemes (The Arts)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the best available estimate of the proportion of individuals on YTS, the job training scheme and the community programme involved in working in the arts.

Mr. Cope: At 31 December 1987, it is estimated that 1·6 per cent. of YTS trainees were on training programmes in creative, educational and recreational service occupations. This figure excludes sports occupations.

Of the 224,000 people working on the community programme at 29 February 1988, approximately 2 per cent. were on projects defined as "cultural".

Similar information for the job training scheme is not available.

Wages Inspectorate

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each year from 1979 to 1987 in relation to (i) all wages councils, (ii) the Hat, Cap and Millinery wages council, (iii) the Clothing Manufacturing wages council, (iv) the Made-Up Textiles wages council and (v) the Retail Bespoke wages council (a) the number of homeworkers in respect of whom the Wages Inspectorate examined employers' records, (b) the number of homeworkers who were visited to check the accuracy of employers' records, (c) the number of homeworkers found to be underpaid as a result of a visit to check the accuracy of employers' records, (d) the amount of arrears assessed as due to those homeworkers, (e) the amount of arrears collected for them (f) the total number of homeworkers found to be underpaid, (g) the total amount of arrears assessed as due to them and (h) the total amount of arrears collected for them.

Mr. Nicholls: The statistics compiled by the Wages Inspectorate do not provide for separate identification of homeworkers visited to check employers' records who were found to be underpaid. Although figures are available for the amount of arrears assessed as due to all homeworkers, the amounts collected for them are not separately identifiable. However, in the experience of the inspectorate it is rare for arrears assessed as due to homeworkers not to be paid.

I regret that the figures stated in the Official Report for 23 May 1986, at columns 359 and 360, were incorrectly stated to be "arrears paid". The relevant line should have read "arrears assessed". The information requested which is available is in the following table:

[2] Statistics for 1979 and 1980 relate to seven councils which were merged in 1980 to form the Clothing Manufacturing wages council

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list for each year from 1979 to 1987 (a) the total number of homeworkers found by the Wages Inspectorate to be earning less than the statutory minimum hourly rate but who were assessed as not being underpaid, (b) the total number of homeworkers found by the Wages Inspectorate to be earning less than the statutory minimum hourly rate and who were assessed as being underpaid and (c) (a) as a percentage of (b);

(2) if he will list for each year from 1979 to 1987 in respect of (i) the Clothing Manufacturing, (ii) the Hat, Cap and Millinery (iii) the Made-Up Textiles and (iv) the Retail Bespoke Tailoring wages councils (a) the number of homeworkers found by the Wages Inspectorate to be earning less than the statutory minimum hourly rate but who were assessed as not being underpaid, (b) the number of homeworkers found by the Wages Inspectorate to be earning less than the statutory minimum hourly rate and who were assessed as being underpaid and (c) (a) as a percentage of (b).

Mr. Nicholls: I regret that the comparisons requested cannot be provided. As virtually all homeworkers in the wages council trades are pieceworkers, what is checked and recorded by inspectors is whether the rates per piece paid by the employer meet the statutory minimum remuneration required of section 15 of the Act. If they do, no homeworker employed on that work is being underpaid. If any do not, all the workers (aged 21 or over) employed on the work concerned are being underpaid and arrears are assessed accordingly. The actual earnings of homeworkers are not therefore a factor in determining whether they are being paid at least the statutory minimum remuneration due. Provided an adequate piece rate has been fixed by the employer, it is up to individual pieceworkers how much they earn.

The numbers of homeworkers found to be underpaid in the wages council trades specified are provided in a separate reply.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish for 1986 and 1987 a table showing (a) the total number of workers found by the Wages Inspectorate to be earning less than the statutory minimum hourly rate but who were assessed as not being underpaid, (b) the number of workers found by the Wages Inspectorate to be earning less than the statutory minimum hourly rate and who were assessed as being underpaid and (c) (a) as a percentage of (b);

(2) if he will publish for 1986 and 1987 in respect of (i) the Clothing Manufacturing, (ii) the Hat, Cap and Millinery, (iii) the Made-Up Textiles and (iv) the Retail Bespoke Tailoring wages councils (a) the number of workers covered by the Clothing Manufacturing wages council found by the Wages Inspectorate to be earning less than the statutory minimum hourly rate but who were assessed as not being underpaid, (b) the number of workers covered by the Clothing Manufacturing wages council found by the Wages Inspectorate to be earning less than the statutory minimum hourly rate and who were assessed as being underpaid and (c) (a) as a percentage of (b).

Mr. Nicholls: I regret that the comparisons requested cannot be provided. Although the Wages Act 1986 enables wages councils to fix a minimum hourly rate, whether or not workers are earning above or below that rate is not necessarily recorded by wages inspectors. What inspectors check and record is whether the legal requirement is met, that is, whether the total sum paid to workers for the week is at least the statutory minimum remuneratin due for that week. Only workers found by inspectors to be receiving less are assessed and recorded as being underpaid. For time workers, statutory minimum remuneration is defined in section 14(4) of the Act. For pieceworkers, the definition is in section 15.

The figures requested for workers found to be underpaid in 1986 and 1987 are as follows:

All wages councils	15,533	9,129
Clothing Manufacturing	942	630
Hat, Cap and Millinery	None	5
Made-up Textiles	2	1

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish in relation to all wages councils for 1986 and 1987 (a) the amount of arrears assessed by the Wages Inspectorate as due to workers but not recovered, (b) the amount where recovery was not considered practicable, (c) the amounts in (a) and (b) expressed as percentages of the arrears actually recovered, (d) the number of workers in respect of whom arrears were assessed but not recovered, (e) the number of workers for whom recovery of arrears was not considered practicable and (f) the numbers in (d) and (e) expressed as percentages of the number to whom arrears were actually paid;

(2) if he will publish in relation to (i) the Clothing Manufacturing, (ii) the Hat, Cap and Millinery, (iii) the Made-Up Textiles and (iv) the Retail Bespoke Tailoring wages councils for 1986 and 1987 (a) the amount of arrears assessed by the Wages Inspectorate as due to workers but not recovered, (b) the amount where recovery was not considered practicable, (c) the amounts in (a) and (b) expressed as percentages of the arrears actually recovered, (d) the number of workers in respect of whom arrears were assessed but not recovered, (e) the number of workers for whom recovery of arrears was not considered practicable and (f) the numbers in (d) and (e) expressed as percentages of the number of workers to whom arrears were actually paid.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is given in the following table:

(f2) (e) above as a percentage of workers paid arrears	10·0	10·9	33·2	23·5	11·1	100

In 1986 and 1987, all arrears were fully recovered in the Hat, Cap and Millinery and the Made-Up Textiles wages council trades. The figures in the table do not indicate the extent to which arrears were recovered in the Clothing Manufacturing and Retail Bespoke Tailoring trades, or in wages council trades overall. The position in 1987 for wages council trades overall was as follows:

	£	Per cent.
Total arrears assessed	1,242,524	—
Arrears not pursued at the request of workers	223,461	18·0
Arrears not pursued for other reasons	193,135	15·5

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish for each year from 1979 to 1987 the total number of establishments where employers were found by the Wages Inspectorate not to have displayed copies of wages orders as required by the wages council legislation: and if he will express this number as a percentage of the establishments visited by the inspectorate;

(2) if he will publish for each year from 1979 to 1987 the total number of establishments classified to the Clothing Manufacturing wages council where employers were found by the Wages Inspectorate not to have displayed copies of wages orders as required by the wages council legislation: and if he will express this number as a percentage of the establishments classified to the Clothing Manufacturing wages council visited by the inspectorate;

(3) if he will publish for each year from 1979 to 1987 the total number of establishments classified to the Hat, Cap and Millinery wages council where employers were found by the Wages Inspectorate not to have displayed copies of wages orders as required by the wages council legislation: and if he will express this number as a percentage of the establishments classified to the Hat, Cap and Millinery wages council visited by the inspectorate;

(4) if he will publish for each year from 1979 to 1987 the total number of establishments classified to the Made-up Textiles wages council where employers were found by the Wages Inspectorate not to have displayed copies of wages orders as required by the wages council legislation; and if he will express this number as a percentage of the establishments classified to the Made-up Textiles wages council visited by the inspectorate;

(5) if he will publish for each year from 1979 to 1987 the total number of establishments classified to the Retail Bespoke Tailoring wages council where employers were found by the Wages Inspectorate not to have displayed copies of wages orders as required by the wages council legislation: and if he will express this number as a percentage of the establishments classified to the Retail Bespoke Tailoring wages council visited by the inspectorate.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is in the following table:

The proportion of establishments found not to be displaying notices is not representative of all employers covered by wages councils. Visits by inspectors tend to be concentrated on establishments more likely to be underpaying workers and less likely, therefore, to be displaying the current notice stating the minimum rates.

[1] This figure was wrongly stated as 18·2 per cent. in a previous reply on 23 May 1986, at column 359 of the Official Report, due to an error in transcription.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ornamental Horticulture

Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the contribution of ornamental horticulture to the environment to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. MacGregor: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 16 to 20 May.

Pigmeat

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of pigmeat production is accounted for by each member state of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest date for which this information is available is 1986. Details are as follows:

	Per cent.
West Germany	27
Netherlands	14
France	13
Spain	11
Denmark	9
Italy	9
United Kingdom	8
Belgium Luxembourg	6
Ireland	1
Portugal	1

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much in tonnes of pigmeat is in private storage presently; what is the amount of pigmeat remaining from 1987 storage that has been and is presently being released into a 1988 system; and if he will make a statement on the state of the pigmeat market and the United Kingdom average price per kilogram dead weight of pigs in the first quarter of the 1988 forecast.

Mr. Donald Thompson: During the first four weeks of the current scheme, almost 70,000 tonnes of pigmeat were contracted to go into store in the EC of which 671 tonnes will be in the United Kingdom. No pigmeat now remains in store from the 1987 scheme. The average all pigs price appears to have stabilised. Cereal prices continue to show a downward trend. The pigmeat MCA has fallen in the last four weeks by 4·8 points to −6·1 per cent. due to a strengthening of sterling. Our commitment to the removal of MCAs from the pigmeat sector remains.

Boxworth Experimental Husbandry Farm

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the research project into the effects of intensive farming methods on wildlife at Boxworth experimental husbandry farm will be terminated; what the reasons for the termination are; whether he will publish the findings of the project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no question of any premature termination of the Boxworth project. The five years of field work originally planned are scheduled to end with the 1988 harvest, but certain extensions have been agreed to enable further information to be obtained before final results are published. In the light of the interim reports, which have been published annually throughout the life of the project, we are already considering future research needs in this area and are in the process of inviting comments from interested organisations.

Research and Development

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place a copy of the Barnes review on the future of research and development in agriculture, fisheries and food in the Library.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 1 March at column 546.

Horticultural Development Council

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the anticipated level of grants for research and development services to the Horticultural Development Council in the next three years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No grants are made to the Horticultural Development Council; it is self-financing from a levy on growers and exists to commission research and development of benefit to growers.

Milk Powder

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any evidence that milk powder from the United Kingdom or European Community exported to Malaysia and the Philipines after April 1986 was subsequently rejected by those countries due to radioactive contamination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: These countries have established extremely strict maximum permitted levels of radiocaesium in milk products and have rejected a small number of consignments of milk powder from EC countries (including the United Kingdom) on the grounds that these very low levels have been exceeded.

I must reiterate that in the light of the rigorous monitoring we have undertaken post-Chernobyl the United Kingdom Government are fully satisfied of the safety of all foodstuffs both on the domestic market and exported.

Bees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents of suspected poisoning of bees by pesticides his Department has investigated since the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 received Royal Assent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since the Food and Environment Protection Act received Royal Assent on 16 July 1985 the Ministry has investigated a total of 191 incidents of suspected poisoning of honeybees in England and Wales. Of that total 132 were confirmed to be incidents involving pesticides. Several of the complaints clustered on particular periods and in particular vicinities and the figures may therefore represent a more limited number of spray applications.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the procedures for protecting bees from the misuse of pesticides.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The system of official approval of pesticide products and the progressive introduction of strict controls over their use give considerable protection to bees and other wildlife.

General protection from the misuse of pesticides has been provided since October 1986. Each user of pesticides is required to take all reasonable precautions to protect the health of human beings, creatures and plants, to safeguard the environment and in particular to avoid the pollution of water. Employers and employees must meet additional requirements to ensure that people who apply pesticides are competent for their tasks. Aerial application of pesticides is further regulated, and aerial operators must give at least 48 hours notice to beekeepers of intended operations.

The pesticides approvals process takes full account of the need to protect bees and, where appropriate, additional conditions of use are specified for individual products. Since 1 January 1988 any such conditions have had the force of law.

Beekeepers themselves have an important role to play in ensuring that the safeguards provided by the legislation are fully effective: all keepers ought to be members of local spray warning liaison schemes so that information about aerial and ground operations can be communicated to them.

The Ministry investigates any wildlife deaths in England and Wales that might have been caused by pesticides. Similar arrangements are operated in Scotland. Information about harm to wildlife caused by pesticides is fed back into the pesticide approvals system. Cases involving possible misuse of pesticides are investigated with a view to detecting and prosecuting the offender.

In the case of honeybees, for England and Wales, deaths are investigated by bee experts at Luddington experimental horticulture station. In certain cases, particularly if disease is ruled out as the apparent cause of death, a field investigation by officers authorised under part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 and an analysis for traces of pesticides follow.

Country Landowners Association

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the purpose of the meeting between his Department and the Country Landowners Association on 21 April; and what subjects will be discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 12 April 1988]: This meeting was offered by my officials in the light of the publication of a report by the north Wales group of the CLA on the effects of the Chernobyl accident which contained a number of errors of fact as well as suggestions for further research. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss the contents of the report and other matters of mutual concern with the CLA.

The meeting will be held later this month because it was not possible to find a mutually acceptable earlier date.

Peanuts

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps the Government have taken and propose to take to prevent the import of peanuts containing aflatoxin.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Imports of peanuts for human consumption are subject to the Importation of Food Regulations 1984 under which it is an offence to import food which is unsound or unwholesome or otherwise unfit for human consumption. Supplementing this general provision, a voluntary agreement with the trade aims to ensure that the level of aflatoxin in imported peanuts is no greater than 0·03 mg/kg. However, following a recommendation of the Food Advisory Committee I intend to consult the interests concerned in the near future on the introduction of a statutory limit of 0·01 mg/kg on aflatoxin in nuts and nut products for sale for human consumption.

Under the Feedingstuffs Regulations 1988, peanuts for use in animal feedingstuffs may not be imported if the level of aflatoxin B_1 exceeds 0·05 mg/kg.

Horses (Reclassification)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to reclassify the horse as an agricultural animal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The classification of all horses as agricultural animals would involve amending a number of different legislative provisions concerned not only with agriculture but with such matters as planning and rating. I believe that horses do have a valuable contribution to make as the agricultural industry adjusts, but it is likely that much of this potential could be achieved without any comprehensive amendment of existing legislation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Research and Development

4. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to encourage a higher level of research and development expenditure by industry in the United Kingdom regions.

Mr. Butcher: The Government have created the right climate to enable industry to invest more in research and development in all parts of the United Kingdom. Within my Department's enterprise initiative, particular attention is given to the needs of the regions. In the assisted areas and urban programme areas support of up to two thirds of the cost of consultancy projects is available rather than half elsewhere. We have also introduced a special scheme — regional enterprise grants — to help firms in the development areas, with fewer than 25 employees, to finance their innovation projects and have expended SMART (Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology), reserving 20 awards for the urban programme areas.

British Steel

9. Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further progress has been made in transferring British Steel to the private sector.

Mr. Atkins: The British Steel Bill is currently in Committee. Other preparations for privatisation are also proceeding and a number of Government advisers have been appointed.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received from Wales concerning the privatisation of the British Steel Corporation.

Mr. Atkins: I have received a small number of letters from various parties in Wales about points of detail. I have so far received few representations about the principle of privatisation itself.

Confectionery Retailers

14. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has of the numbers of retailers of confectionery in the United Kingdom in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: It is estimated that at least 75,000 retail businesses in Great Britain sold some confectionery in 1986, but this figure does not cover incidental sales by small retailers or by many non-retail businesses.

Trade Deficit

15. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the trade deficit for each of the years 1975 to 1988.

Mr. Maude: The current account deficit was £1·7 billion for 1987. Figures for previous years will be printed in the Official Report. However, in the years 1975-1979 there was a cumulative deficit of over £2 billion, while in the years 1980-1986 there was a cumulative surplus of over £23 billion.

17. Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the expenditure per head on industrial research and development; and what information he has as to the comparable figures for the United States, Japan, France and West Germany.

Mr. Butcher: In 1985, the latest year for which internationally comparable information is available, expenditure on industrial research and development per head of population in the United Kingdom was £91. Corresponding figures for France, Japan, West Germany and the United States were £88, £126, £133 and £190, respectively. The information is obtained from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development using exchange rates at purchasing power parities calculated by them to convert foreign currencies to sterling. Where the population estimate for 1985 was not available that for the nearest available year has been taken.

USSR

18. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the latest annual balance of trade between the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Maude: The balance of trade between the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union for 1987 shows a deficit of £384 million though turnover increased by almost 10 per cent. in 1987; United Kingdom exports fell by about 9 per cent. Ministers have emphasised to their Soviet counterparts our hope that a more balanced increase in bilateral trade can be achieved.

Rover Group

19. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline the current state of negotiations between Rover Group and British Aerospace; and if he will make a statement.

24. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in the negotiations for the sale of the Rover Group.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have nothing further to add to my statement on 29 March.

Inner-city Policy

20. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what level of co-operation he is receiving from the private sector with regard to inner-city policies.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been greatly encouraged by the response from the private sector to the action for cities drive launched by the Prime Minister on 7 March. I took part this morning in a breakfast presentation to around 200 business leaders in Newcastle. This was the first of a series of presentations to stimulate the involvement of companies in urban regeneration.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ak the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to visit Bermondsey to discuss his inner cities policy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no such plans at the moment.

Steel Industry

21. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy towards the lifting of steel quotas within the European Community.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At a meeting of the Council of Industry Minister on 22 December which I attended, the Council unanimously concluded that production quotas should end on 30 June unless sufficient commitments on capacity reductions are made by member states. I will press the Council to stick to that clear agreement.

Airbus

22. Mr. Irving: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in discussions with other partner Governments about future management of the Airbus programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The partner Governments have recently received a report by a small group of senior advisers, colloquially known as the "wise men", which the Airbus Ministers had asked to consider how the management of Airbus programmes should develop over the next years. I attended a meeting of the Airbus Ministers in Madrid yesterday at which we began our consideration of that report. We approved the principles underlying the report as a basis for future discussion and invited Airbus Industrie and the partner companies to put forward proposals and a precise schedule in order to put in place the new organisation before the end of 1988. We expect to receive and discuss those proposals at the next meeting of Airbus Ministers in Hanover on 5 May.

I have arranged for copies of the report to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

London Weighting Allowance

23. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much his Department spent on London weighting for its staff during 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The cost of London weighting for the DTI for the 1987-88 financial year was £11·3 million.

Japan (Ministerial Visit)

25. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Secretary of State's recent visit to Japan.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend visited Japan on 10 to 16 March accompanied by nine leaders of British industry. His visit combined meetings with Prime Minister Takeshita and his colleagues with further steps, in the light of the "Opportunity Japan" campaign, to identify the potential for an improved trading relationship with Japan and the scope for mutually beneficial industrial co-operation.

My right hon. and noble Friend had a constructive meeting with Mr. Tamura, Minister for International Trade and Industry. In addition to pressing for the speedy resolution of outstanding problems of access to the Japanese market, the Secretary of State noted the recent positive developments in bilateral trade and welcomed the continuing investment by Japanese companies in the United Kingdom. Both Ministers welcomed the relaunch on a broader basis of official level talks between the two Departments.

My right hon. and noble Friend also met the Telecommunications Minister, Mr. Nakayama, with whom he confirmed an agreement on the liberalisation of value added telecommunication services between the United Kingdom and Japan.

Overall, my right hon. and noble Friend found the Japanese market to be one in which there was now a much greater role for imports: borne out by the recent steady increase in volume imports both globally and from the United Kingdom. The task now is to encourage British business to take maximum advantage of the opportunities opening up in Japan, and my Department will be working to this and through the "Opportunity Japan" campaign, recently launched by my right hon. and noble Friend.

26. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the launch of the Government's inner cities revival programme arranged by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister launched action for cities on 7 March. She was joined by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and colleagues from all the main Departments which have a part to play in helping regenerate our inner cities.

The Government will be spending about £3,000 million on urban regeneration in 1988-89, bringing in several times that amount in private investment. The Prime Minister announced 12 new Government initiatives, including a series of action for cities working breakfasts, aimed at business leaders, explaining to them how they and their companies can help the inner cities.

Waste (Recycling)

27. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for the promotion of recycling of waste materials.

Mr. Butcher: My Department encourages the economic reclamation and recycling of waste in three principal ways. There is an awareness campaign through a video, literature, conferences and other meetings. The issues and opportunities in individual sectors are taken up through specialist conferences and meetings. These have covered or will cover glass, paper, plastics, oil and the role of voluntary collectors. The Department's Warren Spring laboratory carries out research and development work on recycling problems and provides technical advice through its recycling advisory unit.

Enterprise Initiative

28. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the response to the enterprise initiative from business in Derbyshire.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Six hundred and three consultancy support inquiries under the Department's enterprise initiative have been received from businesses in Derbyshire up to 25 March 1988. To that date these inquiries had resulted in 40 applications for consultancies being processed.

Inward Investment

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give a breakdown of inward investment in Britain by standard English region and for Scotland and Wales for each year since 1979, showing the amount received in each region as a proportion of the total in each year.

Mr. Atkins: The following are the Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) figures for inward investments announced in each year since 1979 for the United Kingdom by standard English region, Scotland and Wales (with Northern Ireland added). Table 1 shows for each region the number of projects as a proportion of the total for each year. Table 2 shows for each region the number of associated jobs (both new and safeguarded) as a proportion of each year's total. The data include only those inward investment projects currently known to the IBB. The associated capital investment is not known.

Shipbuilding Industry

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received about his Department's policy towards the shipbuilding industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received a number of representations.

Inner-city Policies (Sheffield)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made with Government inner city policies in Sheffield.

Mr. Atkins: Sheffield will benefit directly from the inner city measures announced by the Prime Minister and other Ministers on 7 March. In particular the new urban development corporation in the lower Don Valley will unlock the enormous potential of some 2,000 acres of blighted land to the north-east of the city centre. The UDC will have a budget of about £50 million over seven years.

British Technology Group

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for the future of the British Technology Group.

Mr. Butcher: The British Technology Group (BTG) comprises the National Enterprise Board and the National Research Development Corporation. The Government consider that BTG is a public body whose operations may be appropriate for transfer to the private sector. Accordingly I have engaged Coopers and Lybrand Associates Limited to carry out a study into the feasibility and mechanics of privatising BTG.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hospital Services, East Antrim

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish those plans of the Northern health board for hospital services in East Antrim which are based on the assumption that only a 300-bed hospital will be provided at Antrim.

Mr. Needham: In its area strategic plan for 1987 to 1992 which it published at the end of 1986, the Northern health and social services board has already set out in detail its proposals for all acute services in its area taking into account the services to be provided at the Antrim hospital.

Antrim Hospital

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated additional revenue expenditure which will be required by the Northern health and social services board to fund the proposed Antrim hospital for (a) phase I, and (b) phase II.

Mr. Needham: The new 300-bed hospital at Antrim will not be completed until 1992 and therefore final estimates of its revenue consequences are not yet available.

The possibility of further developments at Antrim falls outside the current planning period and no estimates can yet be made of either the capital or revenue costs of such developments.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dwellings in each of the six housing executive regions in Northern Ireland are classified as houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that the number of dwellings classified as houses in multiple occupation is not known at present. However, the results of a survey should be available during May 1988.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a definitive survey of houses in multiple occupation was last undertaken.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that fieldwork on the first large scale survey of houses in multiple occupation was completed at the end of February 1988. The survey looked in particular at the physical condition of such dwellings, the degree of sharing of facilities and profiles of tenants. Results of the survey should be available during May 1988.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tenants live in houses in multiple occupation in (a) Belfast and (b) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that information on the number of tenants living in houses in multiple occupation in Belfast and in Northern Ireland will be available only on completion of the analysis of a survey recently carried out.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tenants live in houses in multiple occupation in each of the following district offices areas in South Down: (a) Downpatrick office area, (b) Kilkeel office area, (c) Newry district 1 office area and (d) Newry district 2.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that this information is not available.

It is unlikely that the survey method employed in a recent survey will enable the disaggregation of information to district council levels.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many instances management directions have been made in respect of houses in multiple occupation since the operative date of the 1981 Housing (Northern Ireland) Order.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that no management directives have been issued.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) in which district office areas special grants have been made payable by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive under the 1983 Housing (Northern Ireland) Order in respect of works required for the provision of a means of escape from fire in houses in multiple occupation since the operative date of the order;

(2) how many special grants have been made payable by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive under the 1983 Housing (Northern Ireland) Order in respect of works required for the provision of a means of escape from fire in houses in multiple occupation since the operative date of the order.

Mr. Needham: These are matters for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that no special grants have been paid by the Housing Executive in respect of works required for the provision of a means of escape from fire in houses in multiple occupation.

Housing Associations

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide details of grants and loans made to each housing association in Northern Ireland by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, and indicate the years in which such grants were made.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that no grants have been made to housing associations by the Housing Executive. Details of loans made to housing associations are as follows:

Name of Association and Year	Amount of Loans £
Derry Housing Association

Tenancies (Allocation)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what basis of need tenants are selected by housing associations in Northern Ireland; and what additional provisions are made to ensure that such tenancies are allocated on the basis of housing needs.

Mr. Needham: Registered housing associations in Northern Ireland operate housing selection schemes based on the Housing Executive's tenant selection procedures. Some additions and revisions to individual schemes have been approved by the Department of the Environment (NI) in recognition of the specialist nature of many associations currently operating in the Province.

The Department monitors regularly the management of each association's day-to-day affairs, including the operation of its selection schemes to ensure that tenancies are allocated in accordance with approved schemes.

Unregistered housing associations operate in the private housing sector and are not under the control of the Department of the Environment (NI).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sittings of the House

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the occasions on which the House has sat later than 1.30 am since 1958; and what was the main business under discussion.

Mr. Wakeham: Details of the main business under discussion each time the House has sat later than 1.30 am could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The House sat later than 1.30 am during the 1957-58 Session and 1958-59 Session on the following occasions:

THE ARTS

Attendance Figures

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what estimates he can give of the total annual attendance figures at (a) London dance centres, (b) provincial dance centres, (c) London art centres, (d) provincial art centres, (e) London museums and galleries, (f) provincial museums and galleries, (g) London cinemas, (h) provincial cinemas and (i) all arts and museums, including theatre, concerts and opera, for the years 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Monetary System

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from other European Community members or central bankers about the United Kingdom joining the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Lilley: A number of our partners have expressed views on United Kingdom participation in the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Building Societies Commission

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the reasons for the increase in funds raised for the Building Societies Commission under the General Charge and Fees Regulations from £1·95 million in 1987-88 to £3·322 million in 1988-89; to what extent this increase is attributable to an increase in the value of assets owned by building societies; and what is the cost of administering the Building Societies Commission in 1987-88 and in 1988-89.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that there was a printing error in the explanatory note to the Building Societies (General Charge and Fees) Regulations 1988; the expected receipts from the general charge for 1988-89 are £2,322,000, not £3,322,000. A correction slip is being issued. The explanatory note does not form a part of this order, which remains valid.

The final outturn of the Building Societies Commission's expenditure on services to societies in 1987-88 is not yet available. It is expected to be slightly higher than the actual receipts from the general charge of £1·96 million. The expected cost of the services for 1988-89 is £2·3 million.

The increase in costs is due to the development of the prudential work of the commission and rises in salary and price levels. The fees schedule for 1988-89 has been adjusted to reflect the increased costs, the increase in assets of societies and to recoup the under-recovery of costs from 1986-87.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency in 1987, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm and the subject of the assignment;

Financial Institutions (Consumer Loans)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to discuss with the Governor of the Bank of England capital adequacy requirements for financial institutions engaged in the provision of consumer loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 April 1988]: No.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the mental hospitals which are scheduled to (a) open and (b) close in each health region in England and Wales in each of the next seven years.

Mrs. Currie: The table lists those mental illness hospitals which have, or have had, over 200 beds and which the regional health authorities in England have indicated they plan to close by about 1995, subject to the results of the public consultation which has yet to take place, or is now under way, and to the provision of appropriate alternative accommodation and services.

We have no comprehensive information available on those mental illness hospitals or units which are scheduled to open by 1995.

Details relating to hospitals in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mental illness hospitals which have, or have had, over 200 beds which regional health authorities have indicated they plan to close, subject to consultation and to suitable alternative provision being made, by about 1995.

Pathology Staff

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the report of the independent study commissioned by the National Health Service Management Board's manpower planning advisory group on the provision of pathology staffing; and what representations he has had on the subject of this provision.

Mr. Newton: The report of the independent review commissioned by the NHS management board's manpower planning advisory group on pathology staffing has been received, and is under consideration. The Institute of Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers has requested a meeting with the chief executive of the management board to discuss the report, and about a dozen letters have been received on various aspects of the review.

Amphetamines

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration has been given to reclassifying amphetamines as class A drugs so as to ensure that illegal production, trafficking and supply of such drugs attracts the higher criminal penalties associated with such a category.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

Offences involving amphetamines in injectable form already attract the highest level of maximum penalties under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. We have no plans to reclassify other forms of amphetamines; trafficking in these attracts penalties of up to 14 years' imprisonment.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the numbers of community psychiatric nurses employed by each district health authority.

Mr. Newton: Information in the exact form requested is not available. However the number of nursing staff employed in the community psychiatric service in each district health authority in England at 30 September 1986 is shown in the table.

(T) Denotes Teaching District Health Authorities.

Long-stay Patients

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that departmental statistics will in future distinguish places in accommodation in an informal domestic environment providing long-stay patients with 24-hour medical and nursing supervision, in each district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: Separate information has been collected centrally on small National Health Service units in the community for mentally handicapped people since 1984. At present there are no figures for such units for mentally ill people, but the need for separate data will be monitored in conjunction with the National Health Service.

Abortion

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of women resident in the United Kingdom who had an abortion in 1986 who already had (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four or (e) five previous abortions;

(2) if he will list the number of women not usually resident in the United Kingdom who had an abortion in 1986 who already had (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four or (e) five previous abortions.

Mr. Newton: The available information is given in the table.

Number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 to (a) residents of United Kingdom and (b) non-residents of United Kingdom by number of previous abortions under the Act England and Wales 1986

Number of previous abortions under the Act	Residents of the United Kingdom	Non-residents of the United Kingdom
3	548	79
5	23	4

Women having more than one abortion in 1986 will be counted more than once in this table.

Smoking and Health

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what review of health research has been set in hand to reflect the conclusions of the World Health Organisation congress on smoking and health held in Tokyo in 1987;

(2) if his Department is in possession of any scientific evidence on the health implications of tobacco published since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The Department keeps in touch with all published research work on the health implications of tobacco and takes expert advice from the committee for research into behavioural aspects of smoking and health, and from the independent scientific committee on smoking and health, the fourth of whose reports was published by the Health Departments last month. No additional review of research has been set in hand as a result of the Tokyo conference, which was attended by officials of the Department, but the report of the conference will be carefully studied when it is available in order to consider its implications for the development of policy on smoking and health.

My hon. Friend may like to refer to the independent scientific committee's report which quoted a large number of research studies done both in the United Kingdom and overseas. A copy is in the Library.

Health Index

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Livingston, of 17 March, Official Report, column 679, when he expects to receive the result of the feasibility study of creating a health index; and what arrangement he is making to publish it.

Mr. Newton: We hope to receive advice from officials, based on their initial consideration of the feasibility of this idea, in the next few weeks. Such advice is not intended for publication, but rather to enable consideration to be given to what further action if any, including a statement or publication, is appropriate.

AIDS

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities which have received money from the extra allocation of £10 million for the treatment of AIDS announced by him on 16 December, Official Report, column 1094; and what monitoring arrangements he has made to ensure that these moneys are spent efficiently and specifically on AIDS patients.

Mr. Newton: The £10 million allocated in December 1987 was an additional recognition of the particular pressures faced by three of the Thames regional health authorities in providing services for people with HIV infection and AIDS during 1987/88. The money was allocated as follows: £6 million to North-West Thames, £2·5 million to North-East Thames and £1·5 million to South-East Thames. These authorities will be asked to account for their total expenditure on AIDS-related services as part of the usual health authority planning and outturn procedures.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) direct and (b) indirect maternal deaths in England in each year between 1979 and 1981 occurred in National Health Service hospitals without consultant obstetric units; and how many were associated with anaesthesia.

Mrs. Currie: In 1979-81 there were 22 direct maternal deaths directly due to anaesthesia in England and Wales. There were also a further seven deaths where the administration of anaesthesia made a contribution and of these deaths two were direct and five indirect maternal deaths. Information on where death occurred and the type of obstetric unit is not available.

Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of regional health authorities and special health authorities which have instituted disciplinary proceedings against consultants for failure to fulfil the terms of their National Health Service contracts.

Mr. Newton: We do not become involved in disciplinary proceedings against consultants other than in those cases where a consultant appeals to the Secretary of State against dismissal under paragraph 190 of the terms and conditions of service. The information requested is not therefore held centrally.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to publish guidelines for regional health authorities and special health authorities to help them to monitor consultants.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will institute a survey to determine the numbers of hours a week devoted by consultants to (a) National Health Service work and (b) private practice; and if he will break this down by specialty, region and by type of contract.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to carry out such a survey.

Midwives and Health Visitors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of midwives and health visitors employed in each district health authority, health region and in the United Kingdom; and what knowledge on a national or regional basis his Department has about the case load each midwife and health visitor has.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many midwives and health visitors are employed by each of the health authorities in the North-West regional health authority.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The number of midwives and health visitors in each district health authority in England at 30 September 1986 is shown in table 1. The total number of live and still births in each region in England during 1986 and the number of home visits by health visitors over the same period are shown in tables 2 and 3 respectively. A direct comparison between the staffing and activity figures may be misleading as the activity information given does not reflect the full work load of these staff.

The information for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland.

Notes:
(1) A visit includes each occasion when professional help or advice is given by health visiting staff.
(2) The "first visit" refers to the first visit received by a person from any member of the health visiting staff during the calendar year for any problem.
(3) Visits to households where there is tuberculosis or other infectious diseases or visits by school health visitors are not included in the table.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of midwives and health visitors (a) in post and (b) in training for the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The information requested for September 1985 and September 1986 is given in the table. Similar information for 1987 is not yet available.

Income Support

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any assessment of the effects on the discharge of long-stay mental hospital patients under the care in the community programme by the withholding of higher level supplementary benefit from such patients.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 15 March 1988]: The income support that will be available to patients discharged from a mental illness or mental handicap hospital after a long stay, subsequent to 11 April, will depend on their individual needs and situation. Some will qualify for the disability premium, and some for the severe disability premium. We do not have information about the individual situations of people who may be discharged from long-stay in-patient care in the near future.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the £109 million cost of the regional health authorities and £325 millon cost of the district regional health authorities and special health authorities is spent directly on patient care in a hospital ward, clinic or surgery, as shown in the draft March 1987 Health Service accounts.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 15 March 1988]: The sums quoted include the headquarters costs of vital management and support functions such as finance, planning, supplies procurement, personnel, computer services, etc., which help to ensure the provision of patient treatment services at hospital and unit level.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the £630 million cost of administration, general managers and medical record-keeping shown in the March 1987 draft Health Service accounts for England, hospital services, is in addition to the administrative costs of the districts and regions.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 15 March 1988]: Yes. This operational expenditure at hospital level includes medical records (that is the administration of patients' clinical records) and secretarial and clerical support within hospital wards, diagnostic and treatment departments, accident and emergency and outpatient departments, and so on, without which patient treatment could not be carried out.

Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a table showing (a) the establishment figures, (b) the funded establishment figures and (c) the in-post figures of each regional health authority in England for the following nursing grades: regional nursing officer 1 and 2, regional nurse 1 and 2, district nursng officer grades 1 to 7, director of nursing service grades 1 + to 6, senior nurse grades 1 + to 8, sister I; sister II, health visitor, deputy nursing sister, staff nurse, senior enrolled nurse, enrolled nurse and nursing auxiliary/assistant; and if he will publish, for each grade category, the number of employees in full-time posts, the number of part-time employees and the whole-time equivalent of those part-time employees;

(2) if he will publish a table showing (a) the establishment figures, (b) the funded establishment figures and (c) the in-post figures of each special health authority in England for the top nursing posts and each nursing grade below that; and if he will publish, for each grade category, the number of employees in full-time posts, the number of part-time employees and the whole-time equivalents of those part-time employees.

Mr. Tony Newton [holding answer 30 March 1988]: I regret that information on establishments is not collected centrally. The whole-time equivalent staff in post information for the grades requested is given in the table. Separate information for numbers of whole-time and part-time staff is not readily available to this depth of detail and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Barnet Health Authority

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the percentage increase in funding for the Barnet health authority in 1987-88 over 1986-87; and what were the separate percentage figures for (a) wages and salaries and so on part of this and (b) the remainder.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Allocations to district health authorities are the responsibility of regional health authorities. I understand however that Barnet health authority was, subject to adjustments regarding minor transfers, allocated an estimated increase in funding of 9·95 per cent. between 1986-87 and 1987-88. Funds are not allocated for specific purposes and it is for the health authority to determine how the fund available to it should be spent. My hon. Friend may care to approach the chairman of Barnet health authority for more detailed information.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the pathology laboratories which process smears resulting from the implementation of a computerised call and recall cervical cancer screening programme; if he will list the funded establishment for each of those laboratories; if he will list the total numbers of staff in post; and what arrangements have been made to recruit extra staff to deal with the increased work load generated by the implementation of this programme.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 23 February at columns 183-6 which listed NHS laboratories in England that dealt with cervical cancer smear tests. Information on the funded establishment for each laboratory is not collected centrally. Information for non-NHS laboratories is not available.

The total number of trained staff reported by NHS laboratories in England as being in post on 31 December 1986 (the latest date for which figures are available) was as follows:

Staff	Number employed whole-time on cervical cytology	Staff employed part-time on cervical cytology
		Number	Whole-time equivalent
Pathologists and other medically qualified staff	19	294	67·96
Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers, scientific officers and laboratory cytology screeners	289	900	488·82

Where necessary, laboratories have been recruiting additional staff. The figures above represent a 12 per cent. increase in whole-time equivalent staff employed on cervical cytology over the preceding year end. Increasing the number of staff is only one of the ways in which health authorities can improve the throughput of smear tests and avoid backlogs. Health authorities may also use other laboratories including those in the private sector.

NHS (Growth)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) following the announcement of additional money to the National Health Service on 16 December 1987, what he now expects the real growth in National Health Service resources to be during the current year;

(2) if he will detail the calculations supporting his statement, Official Report, 16 December 1987, column 1102, that National Health Service expenditure will grow by 3 per cent. in 1988-89.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 22 March 1988, c. 88]: I regret that my earlier reply to the hon. Member contained an error. The reference to a forecast of general inflation of 4·25 per cent. for 1988-89 should have read 4·5 per cent. This does not affect the rest of my reply.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 14 April 1988

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Union of Students

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what subjects he discussed at his last meeting with representatives of the National Union of Students.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has had no recent meeting with the National Union of Students. I met officers of the National Union of Students on 29 February at their request to listen to their views on the question of National Union of Students membership raised by early-day motion 449.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Companies' Accounts (Registration)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if he has communicated with the Director of Public Prosecutions regarding the prosecution of any company for failure to register their accounts.

The Attorney-General: I have not done so. Ordinarily, prosecutions for such offences are brought by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Courts (Televising of Proceedings)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration is being given to the televising of proceedings in British courts; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There are at present no plans to televise proceedings in courts in England and Wales.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Prevention

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the latest evidence of the impact of crime prevention schemes.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 14 March 1988 at column 420.

Interpol

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last visited Interpol; and what assessment he made of its present operation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has not visited the Interpol General Secretariat, but the Government have no doubt that Interpol plays an essential part in international police co-operation.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the United Kingdom has contributed to Interpol for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom's membership subscription to Interpol in each of the last 10 years has been as follows:

1986	322,416
1985	251,266
1984	251,047
1983	279,416
1982	259,000
1981	211,516
1980	232,285
1979	179,496
1978	184,669

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward legislation to give full voting rights to all patients in psychiatric hospitals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. A voluntary patient in a psychiatric hospital is already entitled to vote in all elections provided he is included in a register of electors. He may register as an elector in respect of any address with which he has been associated apart from that of the psychiatric hospital itself. He may choose to vote in person or to apply to vote by post or by proxy. These provisions do not apply to a patient detained under an enactment relating to persons suffering from mental disorder. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Prisons (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is considering building any new prisons in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The forward building programme includes a new prison at Wrexham.

Recommendations have been made in a study commissioned by Clwyd county council into possible sites for prisons across the county as a whole. These will be assessed alongside other possible sites which have been identified in the north-west of England.

No other Welsh sites are at the moment being considered or are in the programme.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last attended a meeting of the Pompidou Group on Drug Misuse; and what plans were discussed for co-operation with similar groups elsewhere, such as the Andean Parliamentary Drugs Commission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Pompidou Group Ministers meet every two or three years to set a programme of work for officials to take forward. My right hon. Friend attended the most recent ministerial meeting which was held in London in January 1987 under the chairmanship of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), then Minister of State, Home Office.

There is no formal arrangement for co-operation between the Pompidou Group and the Andean Parliamentary Drugs Commission. There are, however, frequent exchanges of views between representatives of the Group's member states and their counterparts from similar regional groupings elsewhere.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is being done to improve working relations and co-operation between the Pompidou Group on Drug Misuse and each of those parts of the European Community Commission involved in drug misuse-related matters.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With a view to developing a consistent European approach to drug-related problems, in 1986 the Pompidou Group invited the Commission to participate in its activities. A Commissioner attended its ministerial conference in January 1987, and Commission staff take part in its periodic meetings of officials and experts. It is for the Commission to decide upon its representation at such meetings.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what links have now been established between drug trafficking and illegal arms trading.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no direct evidence in this country of such links, but remain alert to the possibility both at national level and in international discussions.

Michael Ryan (Shootings)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to how many of the persons (a) killed by and (b) injured by the late Michael Ryan were struck by bullets fired from (i) an M1 carbine, (ii) an AK56 rifle and (iii) a pistol; and how many were struck with bullets fired from more than one weapon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley police that none of Ryan's victims was struck by bullets from an M1 carbine. Of those who were killed, seven were struck by bullets from a 7·62 Kalashnikov rifle only; eight were struck by bullets from a pistol only; and one person was struck by bullets from a 7·62 Kalashnikov rifle and a pistol. Of those who were injured, one person was struck by bullets fired from a pistol, two were injured by glass or metal other than bullets and in the other 12 cases it is not known what weapon caused the injuries.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to the distance between the late Michael Ryan and each of his victims when they were injured or killed by him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley police that 12 of Ryan's victims were within 10 yd of him when they were killed or injured and the other 19 were over 10 yd away.

Conferences (Policing Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Derbyshire of a breakdown of the costs for policing the National Union of Conservative and Unionist Associations Central Council held in Buxton on 18-19 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Derbyshire that he has notified the county treasurer that the additional costs of policing the meeting are £185,039. This covers police officer and civilian overtime, accommodation and subsistence for police officers, additional equipment, communications, transport, and aid from other forces provided under section 14 of the Police Act 1964.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional funds are being made available to the Derbyshire police authority to cover costs arising from policing the National Union of Conservative and Unionist Associations Central Council held in Buxton on 18-19 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the arrangements for police specific grant at 51 per cent., and for block grant, the Government contribute well over half the costs of policing in Derbyshire.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has obtained any estimate for additional policing costs projected for the 1988 Conservative party annual conference.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Sussex that the Sussex police authority has approved a budget of £1·4 million for the estimated additional cost of policing the Conservative party conference in October 1988. The Government meet a sizeable proportion of the costs of all policing in Sussex through normal police funding arrangements of police grant at 51 per cent. plus block grant.

Union Flag

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to prevent political parties from using the Union flag at demonstrations and conferences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the London boroughs within each of the areas listed in his reply of 31 March, Official Report, column 682, in respect of traffic wardens.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

No. 1 Area (North):
Waltham Forest
Redbridge
Haringey

Greater London Co-ordination Centre

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 31 March, Official Report, column 682, if he will give details of any expert advice from outside his Department which caused him to reject the case for primary legislation made by the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority in order that the Greater London Co-ordination Centre could be maintained on a permanent basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend took account of views which the Health and Safety Executive expressed to the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. The views of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis were also taken into account. Additionally, my right hon. Friend consulted Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services.

Firearms (Police)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of operations in which firearms were issued to police officers in England and Wales in 1987; in how many of those operations shots have been fired by police officers; how many police officers are currently qualified to carry firearms; and what were the equivalent figures for (a) 1986 and (b) 1983.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 24 March 1988, c. 186]: I regret that the reply was inaccurate. The correct reply is as follows:

The number of operations in England and Wales, against criminals or those known or believed to be armed, in which firearms were issued to police officers in 1987 was 2,185. This was 10·92 per cent. fewer than in 1986 and 31·29 per cent. fewer than in 1983. Police officers fired shots in seven, or 0·003 per cent., of those operations. The number of such operations in which shots were fired by police officers in the preceding four years was three in 1983; six in 1984; seven in 1985; and one in 1986. As at 31 December 1987 a total of 7,349 police officers in England and Wales were qualified to carry firearms. This was 12·46 per cent. fewer than at the end of 1986 and 43·66 per cent. fewer than at the end of 1983. The latest figure represents 5·99 per cent. of the total police strength in England and Wales.

WALES

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received calling for the abolition of the regional health authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: None. There are no regional health authorities in Wales.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

91. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the saving to the Exchequer as a result of the changes in housing benefit this April.

Mr. Portillo: The changes save £650 million when compared with what the old scheme would have cost next year. This comprises £150 million in public expenditure and £500 million in rate rebates which are not classified as public expenditure.

Marginal Tax Rates

92. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many people will face marginal tax rates of over (a) 40 per cent., (b) 50 per cent., (c) 60 per cent. and (d) 70 per cent. as a result of the interaction of the tax and social security systems, in 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir Rhys Williams) on 25 March at columns 243-46. This gives the numbers of working heads with combined marginal tax and benefit withdrawal rates above 50 per cent.

We estimate that 45,000 families with children and 25,000 couples and single people without children have combined rates between 40 and 50 per cent.

Regional Secure Units

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which health district have secure hospital accommodation available within their own district.

Mrs. Currie: Central information indicates that at the end of 1986 the following district health authorities had secure accommodation in one or more of their mental-illness or mental-handicap hospitals and units. Latest available information relating to permanent regional secure units was provided in my reply to my hon. Friend on 12 April 1988 at columns 111-12.

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the main difficulties experienced by other countries as a result of reducing hospital accommodation for the mentally ill and encouraging a shift to care in the community for these patients.

Mrs. Currie: There are four main lessons to be learnt from the experience of other countries in reducing hospital accommodation for mentally ill people and encouraging a shift to care in the community.

Major changes take time to implement effectively. Present changes are evolutionary and not revolutionary. A change towards less in-patient care and more care in other settings has been under way for many years in this country; some signs of this change can be traced back to the 1930s. The steady reduction in the number of patients resident in mental illness hospitals and units reflects that change and the development of new treatments and styles of care. The closure of some hospitals consequent to this changed pattern of care requires careful assessment of existing and likely future needs and reprovision of necessary services locally prior to closure. This is a process that should not normally be hurried.

Changes are brought about most effectively when planned jointly by all care agencies concerned, whether statutory or not, and should take account of the views of mental illness sufferers and their families. Changes are most effective when there is strong local commitment to making the change work.

Measures need to be taken to ensure that, as secondary mental health care staff move into the community, their main focus of activity continues to be those people who are severely disabled by mental illness. Some countries have reported an undue movement of staff-time towards dealing with people who, although suffering from mental distress, are not severely disabled at the expense of the more severely disabled. Ministers are very conscious of this potential problem and are keeping closely in touch with research on the subject.

Particular attention needs to be paid to ensuring that patients with longer-term disabilities who are being treated in the community are regularly reviewed and continuity of care ensured so far as possible.

Industrial Disablement Pension and Housing Benefit (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many individuals in the Nottingham, North area receive industrial disablement pension; how many of them currently receive housing benefit; and how many will lose part or all of that housing benefit from April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people will (a) receive reduced housing benefit and (b) lose their entitlement to housing benefit in Houghton and Washington from April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to estimate by constituency the number of pensioners now receiving housing benefit who will lose rights after the change in the social security system in April.

Mr. Portillo: No. We hold no data that would enable us to do this on a constituency-by-constituency basis.

Benefits

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what investigations or inquiries he has made into the financial effects of his recent changes in social security benefits into the following categories of persons who were in receipt of supplementary benefit (a) widows with children of school age, (b) registered disabled persons under pensionable age and (c) mentally handicapped persons.

Mr. Scott: Overall estimates of the effects of the income-related benefit changes are contained in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits," published last October. It is not possible to break down these estimates further into the categories requested. Further information about the effects of the changes will become available in due course through our monitoring arrangments.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criticisms were made to his Department regarding the validity of the conclusion of the National Childhood Encephalopathy Study that the risk of brain damage from whooping cough vaccination was approximately one in 300,000 doses of the vaccine.

Mrs. Currie: The National Childhood Encephalopathy Study's (NCES) estimate was that the number of previously normal children with evidence of persistent neurological damage one year after vaccination with the diphtheria, tetanus and pertussis (DTP) vaccine was one in 310,000 injections.

The chief criticisms of the NCES conclusion were contained in a report prepared by Professor Gordon Stewart, which claimed that the NCES figure was an under-estimate. Professor Stewart's findings were fully considered by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), which advises the Health Departments on all aspects of immunisation. The JCVI and other authorities accepted the NCES conclusion as the best estimate available, and it is acknowledged in the 1983 edition of the memorandum, "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease."

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what internal material relating to whooping cough vaccination was made available to the defendants and plaintiffs in the whooping cough vaccination case; if his Department will discuss the decision of the court with corresponding departments in other countries with a statutory vaccine damage payments scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: As part of the proceedings in the case of Loveday v. Renton a summons for discovery was issued against the Department by the plaintiff's solicitors seeking an order to disclose certain categories of documents. An agreement was reached as to which documents should be disclosed and under what conditions. These conditions included undertakings by the plaintiff's solicitors in order to preserve the confidentiality of the documents and to prevent their use for any purposes other than the court proceedings.

We are currently considering the implications of the judgment in this case for the statutory scheme of payments under the Vaccine Damage Act 1979, and will make a further statement as soon as possible.

Melagenina

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide the necessary funding for testing the effectiveness of melagenina in the treatment of vitiligo.

Mr. Newton: No. Any medicinal product such as this lotion must be subject to a product licence before it may be marketed in the United Kingdom. Applicants for product licences need to supply sufficient data to the licensing authority to enable them to assess the products safety, quality and efficacy.

Control of Medicines (Report)

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress he has made in considering the Evans/Cunliffe report on the control of medicines which he published on 26 January.

Mr. Newton: Dr. Evans and Mr. Cunliffe found that

"the overall record of medicines control in the United Kingdom is a good one and its reputation stands deservedly high"

and concluded that the DHSS

"record in protecting the public without inhibiting therapeutic innovation and progress is second to none."

They also noted that the Department has "handled the growing burden of licensing work with commendable increase in efficiency."

At the same time they made a number of criticisms of the organisation and working practices of the medicines division, and also commented on the room for improvement by the pharmaceutical industry in the submission of licence applications. They made 54 recommendations. We have consulted the Medicines Commission on key proposals and I can now set out the conclusions we have so far reached.

I accept Dr. Evans' and Mr. Cunliffe's recommendation that the responsibility for the control of medicines should remain in DHSS and that the Medicines Control Agency, as it will be known, should be under the charge of a single director. I also accept that the work of the agency should be organised in functional teams and that these should be supported by suitable information technology. The actual structure of the agency will not be determined until after the director has been appointed.

I accept in principle the recommendation that the whole cost of the agency should be met from licence fees and we will now discuss this with the trade associations. It will be necessary to establish arrangements to show the industry that the cost of the agency is no more than is required for the tasks it has to carry out. I do not, however, propose to accept the recommendations for a budget committee on which the industry would be represented. As Dr. Evans and Mr. Cunliffe pointed out, the Department must remain independent of the industry in carrying out its licensing work. It will more easily be seen to be so if, instead of setting up a committee on which both parties were represented, the Department arranged meetings with the industry as required to explain the basis for the levels of fees it proposed and to discuss the management performance of the agency. These arrangements will in no way impinge on the agency's independence of the industry in carrying out its responsibilities for controlling medicines.

The first priority must be to appoint the director and I am taking action to this end. My intention is that the main managerial and financial changes should be made well in time for the financial year 1989-90. In the meantime the Department is pursuing the other recommendations in the Evans-Cunliffe report.

I am grateful to Dr. Evans and Mr. Cunliffe for their report. I believe they have shown ways, in their words, "to make a good system better" and of enabling the Department to cope with further increases in licensing and other work on the control of medicines. Improvements in the management of the work will benefit patients and will further our objective of promoting investment by research-based pharmaceutical companies in this country.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

BBC External Services

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is planning to take any action with regard to the licensing regulations which prevent the BBC external services from seeking additional funds from advertising or other sources.

Mr. Eggar: We have no plans to do so. It is open to the BBC to propose changes to the licence and agreement, but any change in the present funding arrangements of the BBC external services would require very careful consideration, particularly in relation to the BBC's editorial independence and the character of external services' broadcasts.

Gibraltar

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of statements made by the new Chief Minister of Gibraltar regarding negotiations on the future of Gibraltar, he will make a statement on the progress made so far in the discussions held between British and Spanish officials on the specific areas referred to in the Brussels declaration.

Mrs. Chalker: Following my right hon. and learned Friend's last meeting with the Spanish Foreign Minister, agreement was reached on joint declarations on Gibraltar airport, the proposed ferry service to Algeciras and the need to take steps to improve the flow of traffic by land between Gibraltar and Spain. Her Majesty's Government remain fully committed to the Brussels process.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any advice has been issued to British commercial undertakings in Panama in respect of payments of local fares and charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Our advice has not been sought by British commercial undertakings in Panama and none has been given.

Turkey (Prime Minister's Visit)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional costs were incurred by the British embassy in Turkey associated with the recent visit by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Eggar: Costs incurred by the British embassy in Ankara were £805.

Bangladesh

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Bangladesh regarding the persecution of the tribal people in the Chittagong hill tracts of Bangladesh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have on several occasions raised with the Bangladesh Government at the highest levels the concern felt in this country for human rights in Bangladesh. My noble Friend the Minister of State, the Lord Glenarthur, did so most recently with the Bangladesh high commission last month.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textile and Clothing Exports

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in view of the challenge from China to United Kingdom textile and clothing industries, he will make it his policy to adopt a firm stance in the renegotiation of the European Economic Community/China textile agreement due to take place in the current year, and in particular to ensure that China is treated no more favourably than other dominant suppliers.

Mr. Atkins: Preparations for the renegotiation of the EC/China bilateral textiles agreement later this year are at an early stage. My Department is in touch with the United Kingdom textile and clothing industry to obtain its views on United Kingdom priorities for the negotiations, and these will be taken into account when we consider the stance to adopt in the European Community's preparatory discussions. Our position will, of course, recognise the significant place which China now holds as a textile and clothing supplier to the Community market, as well as other relevant factors; for example, the fact that it is a state-trading economy and also a developing country.

Restrictive Practices

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all industries and professions which have been the subject of a referral by the Government to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, as part of the process to eliminate restrictive practices, since 1979.

Mr. Maude: Agreements subject to the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976 are not referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, but are registered by the Director General of Fair Trading, who may refer them to the Restrictive Practices Court.

The Fair Trading Act 1973 gives both the Director General of Fair Trading and Ministers powers to make monopoly references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Ministers may also make general references under section 78 of the 1973 Act, and references as to restrictive labour practices under section 79 of that Act. The Competition Act 1980 gives the Director General of Fair Trading powers to refer anti-competitive practices. A list of all such references made to the commission since the beginning of 1979 is as follows:

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all those professions currently under examination by the Government as part of the process to eliminate restrictive practices.

Mr. Maude: The Director General of Fair Trading has a statutory duty to keep commercial activities under review, and this includes the behaviour of the professions. The Government, in developing their policies, give a high priority to competition. We have also stated in the recent Green Paper, "Review of Restrictive Trade Practices Policy", (Cm. 331) that exemptions from the current restrictive trade practices legislation, including those for professional services, will not be automatically carried across into the new legislation, but will have to be justified afresh.

Steelworkers

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further representations have been made to the EEC Commission regarding outstanding payments of iron and steel European readoption and benefit scheme benefits due to Sheffield steelworkers made redundant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My officials have made a number of further representations at a senior level, and have made the Commission well aware of the consequences which its delay is having on applicants under the iron and steel European readoption and benefit scheme. Regrettably the Commission has still to take a decision on outstanding applications for approval of aid under the treaty of Paris.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Community Education Council

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on his planned changes to the remit of the Scottish Community Education Council;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future role and level of grant of the Scottish Community Education Council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The council was set up in 1982 with the remit of advising the Secretary of State on all matters concerned with community education and promoting the development of community education.

After six years it is appropriate to review this remit, and I have concluded that there will be less need in future for the exercise of the council's advisory function. On the other hand, there is scope for developing its function as a resource centre, with the aim of recovering a higher proportion of production costs from income other than grant.

The new council which takes office in April will oversee this redirection of effort and deal with the practical implications. I have accordingly decided to make available to the council grant at last year's rate for the period 1 April to 30 June (£141,600) so that it can assess the position. Future levels of grant will be determined in the light of the council's needs, having regard to its new remit and its corporate plan.

Education Reform

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to introduce legislation to allow schools to opt out of the state education system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have made it clear that there will be no proposals for opting out in the current session. The School Boards (Scotland) Bill, which was introduced on 16 March, contains no such provisions, and we do not anticipate any change to the Bill for this purpose.

The Government have also consistently made clear that we do not rule out provisions for opting out in future. However, no decisions have yet been taken about future legislation.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list in the Official Report the total amount of grant allocated by his Department to the Scottish Community Education Council in each of the past five years;

(2) when he expects to announce the total Scottish Office grant to be allocated to the Scottish Community Education Council in the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Grant paid by the Scottish Education Department to the Scottish Community Education Council has been as follows:

1983-84	334,000
1984-85	346,350
1985-86	356,000
1986-87	542,000
1987-88	566,000

As to grant for 1988-89, I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave on 12 April to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Cancer Screening

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the present arrangements for publicising the case for patients to undergo cancer screening in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Cervical cancer screening in Scotland is presently mainly undertaken as part of the normal medical care of women attending ante-natal clinics, post-natal clinics and family planning and well women clinics. A substantial proportion of all tests are carried out by general practitioners some of whom operate a call/recall system for their own patients. Women are advised about the test by general medical practitioners or other professional staff.

I announced on 10 December 1987 that a comprehensive cervical cancer screening service is to be made available to all women in Scotland between 20 and 60 years and the Scottish Health Education Group will mount a suitable publicity campaign at the appropriate time.

I also announced on 20 October 1987 our intention to establish centres throughout Scotland to provide a comprehensive nationwide breast cancer screening programme for all women between 50 and 64 years by 1991. The first four centres, in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen and Dundee, will come into operation during the course of this year. Again SHEG will be preparing publicity material for this programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Executive

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the capital and revenue expenditure by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the years since its inception.

Mr. Needham: The capital and revenue expenditure by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each financial year since 1972-73 is as follows:

	Capital £ million	Revenue £ million	Gross Total £ million
1972-73	28·5	27·0	55·5

[1] Provisional

Generating Capacity

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a decision will be taken on the next phase of generating capacity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: It is not possible to give a firm date for decisions on new generating capacity. The Government are currently considering revised proposals from Northern Ireland Electricity and Antrim Power Company Limited and will take decisions as soon as possible.

Police Stations (Repairs)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the police stations which have needed rebuilding or major repairs after bomb damage in each year since 1979, indicating the cost, when work began and when it was completed or ceased due to Irish Republican Army threats, and which stations which were damaged do not at present have work in hand to repair them;

(2) on which new police stations in Northern Ireland work was brought to a halt by Irish Republican Army threats during each year since 1979; if he will indicate when work (a) ceased, and (b) restarted; what was the contract price for each station; what were the sums paid for work actually carried out; and when he now expects the work to be completed, together with the completion cost.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 12 April . 81]: The information is as follows:

TRANSPORT

A19 (Litter)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department takes to ensure the efficient removal of litter from the A19 between Middlesbrough and Sunderland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The requirements of the Department for routine maintenance of the A19 trunk road is contained within the Department's document, "Code of Practice for Routine Maintenance".

The section of the A19 between Middlesbrough and Sunderland is maintained on behalf of the Department by three agent authorities: Sunderland metropolitan borough council, Durham county council and Cleveland county council. They have all been seen to be observing the code as far as the question of litter is concerned.

In accordance with general policy, litter receptacles are not provided in the lay-bys on the A19. The public are advised to take litter home. This general policy appears to work well. There is no evidence of significant dumping. The Department arranges for litter clearance where it may be seen there is a hazard or nuisance. Particular problems are dealt with subsequent to reports from several sources, including our agent authorities, the police, motoring organisations and the travelling public.

The code requirements adopted by the Department's maintaining agent authorities and district councils as appropriate on the A19 trunk road, include:

(a) sweeping the trunk road annually;
(b) removing hazardous material, litter and debris as soon as possible as reported by routine maintenance personnel, the police, motoring organisations and the public; and
(c) scavenging and cleaning of lay-bys and the removal of wind-blown litter and abandoned cars, if necessary, by district councils supplemented by reports from several and obvious sources.

The Department's regional office staff are aware of the conditions on the A19 trunk road and react to circumstances as necessary.

Bus Lanes (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has of the number of bus lanes installed and removed in London since 31 March 1986.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The reduction in the annual income tax liabilities of a married man with gross annual income of £100,000 would be (a) £13,498 from this year's Budget proposals and (b) £13,585 from all Budget changes from 1980-81 to 1988-89. The figures assume that the taxpayer is entitled to no income tax relief or allowance other than the married man's allowance, and compare income tax liabilities under the proposed tax regime for 1988-89 with those under the 1987-88 and 1980-81 regimes indexed to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory formula.

80. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to meet the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss exchange rate policy.

75. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the rise in employment in the United Kingdom economy since 1983.

Mr. Major: Employment in the United Kingdom has risen by 1¼ million since 1983.

42. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much unemployment has fallen in the United Kingdom economy over the past year.

55. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much unemployment has fallen in the United Kingdom economy over the past year.

71. Mr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much unemployment has fallen in the United Kingdom economy over the past year.

Mr. Major: Unemployment has fallen by 535,000 over the past year. It has now fallen for 19 months in succession since July 1986, by 679,000 in total, the largest fall since the war.

Personal Incomes

39. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the effect of his Budget proposals on a man and wife over 80 years with an income in excess of £10,600 per annum.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The reduction in tax compared with 1987-88 will be as follows:

Income £	Reduction in tax £	Per cent.
11,000	363	3·3
14,000	279	2·0

Above this level of income the reduction will be the same as for a non-aged couple. Calculations assume that the wife has no earnings or pension in her own right.

46. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the change in weekly income of a single parent, with two children, drawing supplementary benefit and child benefit, as a result of his Budget changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Budget is about tax, so will not have a direct effect on the incomes of those who do not pay tax. A lone parent on supplementary benefit is unlikely to be directly affected by the Budget changes unless he or she takes a job in the course of the financial year. But, on average, a lone parent can expect income support to be about £4 a week higher than the supplementary benefit payable before the introduction of the social security reforms on 11 April.

51. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly gain of a single person earning £400,000 a year as a result of his Budget tax changes.

58. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly gain of a single person earning £350,000 a year from his Budget tax changes.

61. Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly gain of a single person earning £200,000 a year from his Budget tax changes.

62. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly gain of a single person earning £250,000 a year as a result of his Budget tax changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table shows the gains from the Budget at each of the specified levels of earnings, assuming that there is no other income. The figures refer only to income tax and assume that the taxpayer is entitled to no income tax reliefs or allowances other than the single person's allowance. The calculations are made by comparing income tax liabilities under the 1987-88 income tax regime with those under the Budget proposal for 1988-89.

Gross yearly earnings £000s	Gain from income tax changes £ per week
200	656·54
250	848·85
350	1,233·46
400	1,425·77

Monetary Aggregates

40. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect of exchange rate intervention in the last 12 months on the rate of growth of United Kingdom monetary aggregates.

69. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect of exchange rate intervention in the last 12 months on the rate of growth of United Kingdom moneatary aggregates.

Mr. Lilley: The impact of intervention on M0 is offset automatically by the Bank of England's daily money market operations. There is no simple relation between intervention and broad monetary growth. The Government's policy is to fund all intervention; that is, sterilise it. The published figures for February 1988 indicate that all intervention and other borrowing has been fully funded in the 12 months to that date.

Inflation

45. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

Mr. Lilley: The increases in retail prices over the 12 months ending February 1988 was 3·3 per cent.

Manufactured Goods

50. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of payments deficit or surplus for manufactured goods in 1979; and what he expects this deficit or surplus to be in 1988.

79. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of payments deficit or surplus for manufactured goods in 1979; and what he expects this deficit or surplus to be in 1988.

85. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of payments deficit or surplus for manufactured goods in 1979; and what he expects this deficit or surplus to be in 1988.

Mr. Major: In 1979 the balance of trade in manufactured goods was a surplus of £2·7 billion. The forecast published at the time of the Budget was for a deficit on trade in manufactures of £8½ billion in 1988. The current account as a whole is expected to show a small deficit of £4 billion in 1988, less than 1 per cent. of GDP.

Council of Ministers

52. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next proposes to have discussions with the European Community Council of Ministers about European monetary matters.

Mr. Brooke: The next meeting of the European Community's Council of Economic and Finance Ministers is expected to be held on 18 April. The agenda is expected to include the liberalisation of capital movements.

OECD Countries (Budgets)

53. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have achieved a balanced budget or a budget surplus in the current year.

54. Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have achieved a balanced budget or a budget surplus in the current year.

57. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have achieved a balanced budget or a budget surplus in the current year.

Mr. Lilley: As well as the United Kingdom, Australia, Denmark, Norway and Sweden are expected to achieve approximately balanced budgets in the current year.

Corporation Tax

56. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the increase in revenue received following reductions in corporation tax since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table shows corporation tax receipts in the years from 1978-79 and the rate of tax applicable to income in each year.

	£ million[1]	Full rate per cent.	Small companies rate per cent.
1978-79	3,940	52	42
1979-80	4,646	52	40
1980-81	4,645	52	40
1981-82	4,930	52	40
1982-83	5,679	52	38
1983-84	6,184	50	30
1984-85	8,341	45	30
1985-86	10,708	40	30
1986-87	13,495	35	29
[2]1987-88	15,600	35	27
[3]1988-89	19,800	35	25

[1] Including advance corporation tax.
[2] Estimated.
[3] Budget forecast.

Workplace Nurseries

64. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the cost to the Exchequer of the introduction of tax relief for the expenses of workplace nurseries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Firm estimates are not available but it is thought that the direct revenue cost of exempting the benefit of workplace nurseries from tax might be of the order of £1 million per annum.

National Insurance

65. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the integration of national insurance contributions into the income tax system.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject.

Married Women (Taxation)

74. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responses he has received to his Budget proposals for changes in the taxation of married women.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory).

Take-Home Pay

74. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what pay increase a married man with two children on average earnings would need to maintain his real take-home pay unchanged between 1987-88 and 1988-89.

90. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what pay increase a married man with two children on average earnings would need to maintain his real take-home pay unchanged between 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: After his income tax reductions, a pay increase of 2 per cent. would be more than enough to maintain his real take-home pay.

89. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much in real terms he expects take-home pay for a married man with two children on average earnings to have risen between 1978-79 and 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I expect his real take-home pay to have risen by 27½ between 1978-79 and 1988-89, compared with about ½per cent. between 1973-74 and 1978-79 under the Labour Government.

Pay-As-You-Earn Deductions

78. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to reduce the total amount of pay-as-you-earn deductions written off as irrecoverable.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Measures introduced in 1985 allow the Inland Revenue to assess and take recovery action for unpaid PAYE more quickly. Regulations now before the House introduce an interest charge where overdue PAYE is formally determined. The Budget proposals include a more general end-year interest charge on overdue PAYE, to come into force once the necessary computer facilities in the Revenue are operational.

Pensions (Income)

83. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on the weekly income of a single pensioner with no private income or pension as a result of his Budget changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Budget is about tax, so will not have a direct effect on the incomes of those who do not pay tax. A single pensioner with no private income or pension is unlikely to be directly affected by the Budget changes but will have a 4·2 per cent. increase in state pension from 11 April.

Business Taxation

84. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responses he has received to his Budget proposals for changes in business taxation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown).

Personal Taxation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the changes in the personal taxation regime announced in the Budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend's proposals for tax cuts and reform have been widely welcomed.

Taxation Changes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received arising from the taxation changes proposed in his Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend's proposals for tax reduction and reform have been widely welcomed.

National Health Service

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual cost incurred by the Treasury in raising and then distributing that proportion of financial resources which is designated by the Government to be spent on the National Health Service.

Mr. Major: There are no separate arrangements for collecting revenue to fund particular activities. In 1987-88 total central Government revenues from taxes and national insurance contributions are estimated at around £144 billion. Most of these revenues are collected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue. The administrative costs of the two Departments were £1·5 billion. Some £20·7 billion was spent on the NHS so, on a pro rata basis, the cost of collecting centrally-funded NHS expenditure was about £215 million. The costs of distributing the funds spent on the NHS cannot be separately identified.

Manufacturing Industry (Investment)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he proposes to increase investment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's economic policies will continue to encourage capital investment by promoting an environment in which business can prosper.

ENVIRONMENT

Lower Don Valley

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether all the finance proposed for the lower Don valley urban development corporation is new money; and if there will be no reduction in existing allocations of finance to Sheffield.

Mr. Trippier: The proposed urban development corporation would bring additional Government resources to Sheffield of about £50 million over the next seven years.

Sheffield Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what developments are already commissioned in the area covered by the Sheffield urban development corporation and what is their total development cost.

Mr. Trippier: The Coopers and Lybrand report identified a number of proposals in the area of the proposed urban development corporation which it estimates could bring about £300 million investment into the lower Don valley.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications were received by Sheffield local authority in each of the last two years in the area covered by the urban development corporation; how many were rejected; and what was the average time for receiving planning permission in rejection.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is not available as statistics on development control are not collected centrally for areas smaller than local planning authorities.

Endangered Species Branch

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to public funds of the endangered species branch of his Department; how many staff work in this branch; and how many import licences were issued by it in 1987.

Mr. Ridley: The current estimated cost is £537,136 annually. The number of staff employed is 23. The number of import licences issued in 1987 was 15,923, which represents about 60 per cent. of the work of the branch.

System-built Houses

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has received from Liverpool city council concerning defective dwellings, particularly Boot and Boswell-type houses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will meet a delegation from Liverpool city council to discuss the problems of defective dwellings of Boot and Boswell-type houses.

Mrs. Roe: We have receied various letters from Liverpool city council concerning its housing defects obligations, including one from the city solicitor about Boot and Boswell houses.

The Department's officials met council officers on 15 March for a full discussion. The council has also bid for a share of the £20 million reserve set aside nationally for 1988/89 for those authorities with particular HDA difficulties; decisions on the additional allocations will be made soon. In these circumstances we do not think that a delegation from the council is the best way forward. I will, however, write to the hon. Member with a copy of my officials' reply to the city solicitor.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each urban development corporation the amount of public money allocated for each year since its inception, and the percentage changes these sums represent.

Mr. Trippier: The grants-in-aid allocated to urban development corporations are given each year in the Supply Estimates. Subsequent amendments and eventual outturn are recorded respectively in the relevant Supplementary Estimates and in subsequent Supply Estimates.

Concierge Systems

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report details of his Department's report on concierge systems.

Mrs. Roe: My Department published a report entitled "A Better Reception: the development of concierge schemes" on 21 March. The report examines different approaches to concierge arrangements in blocks of flats and lists nearly 40 local authorities who are experimenting in this way. The evidence at this early stage of development suggests strongly that they can be cost-effective in reducing crime and vandalism and in increasing residents' sense of security, as well as in improving the provision of day-to-day housing management services. I have arranged for copies of this report to be placed in the Library.

Hampton Court Palace

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the figures for the takings at Hampton Court palace for Easter weekend 1988 with the corresponding figures for Easter weekend in 1987, 1986, 1985 and 1984 and such previous years for which figures are conveniently available.

Mr. Moynihan: The information is as follows:

	Admission takings £	Sales takings £	Maze car park £	Total £
1988	34,942	10,573	[3]6,875	52,390
1987	33,040	8,397	5,763	47,200
1986	[1]10,683	3,426	3,248	17,357
1985	22,149	6,439	4,274	32,862
1984	[2]15,850	4,305	4,242	24,397

[2] Closed Good Friday in 1984 and previous years.
[3] From 27 March 1988, entry to the maze is free to those paying to enter the state apartments (full price £2·80).
Except for 1984 and 1986, all figures relate to Good Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Monday.
Figures for years prior to 1984 not readily available.

Downing Street (Decoration and Furnishing)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of (a) decoration and (b) furnishing for 10 Downing street in 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: In the 11 months up to the end of February 1988, the latest available figures, expenditure during 1987-88 on furnishings and decoration in 10 Downing street was £14,836·15 for furnishing and £11,433·07 for decoration.

Secure Car Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost of the secure car service in 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: The cost of providing a secure car service to Ministers and heads of Departments during 1987-88 was £2·37 million.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost for the Prime Minister's secure car service in 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: The cost of providing secure cars for the Prime Minister during 1987-88 was £107,380.

Ministerial Vehicles (Parking Fines)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will (a) give the total amount paid by his Department in 1987 in respect of parking fines incurred by ministerial vehicles and (b) provide a breakdown by Government Department in terms of offence, fine, date and location.

Mr. Chope: The sum paid in parking fines in respect of Government car service vehicles in 1987 was £1,037 for 85 offences, a significant reduction on 1986.

The details by Department are as follows:

	Fines
Scottish Office	36
Welsh Office	2
Treasury	2
Department of Energy	3
Home Office	6
Department of Environment	6
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	10
Department of Employment	4
Department of Health and Social Security	7
Department of Transport	2
Management and Personnel Office	2
Northern Ireland Office	1
Department of Education and Science	1
	85

A further breakdown could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

London Marathon

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution his Department is making to the organisation of the 1988 London marathon; and what charges will be made to the organisers.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government continue to give support and encouragement to the London marathon. This includes the use of a substantial part of Greenwich park and of routes in St. James's park. No facility fee is charged for the use of the royal parks, but the London marathon board is required to reimburse the net costs of additional works and facilities provided specifically for the event. Net costs in 1987 were £880.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will accept a nomination from the Association of London Authorities for membership of the London residuary body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend is always prepared to consider suggestions for appointments but he sees no need at present to make further appointments to the London residuary body.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 22 October 1987, if there have been any changes in remuneration of members of the London residuary body and when the next review is due.

Mr. Chope: One member's remuneration was reduced to £13,084 from 1 April 1988 to reflect a reduced time commitment. The remuneration of the other members and the chairman has remained unchanged since 1 October 1987.

The next review is expected to take place in the context of the 1988 general review of remuneration of members of public boards.

New Homes (Docklands)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the median price paid for new homes on land owned by the London Docklands Development Corporation in 1987.

Mr. Trippier: This information is being collated. I will write to the hon. Member.

Sports Sponsorship

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will break down the total business sponsorship of sport in 1986-87 by each sport;

(2) what are the latest estimates of total business sponsorship of sport in the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will give a detailed breakdown of how these estimates were made.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council's estimates of national business sponsorship of sport, by calendar years, are as follows:

1985	128
1987	164

These estimates are derived from coverage in the press and television and other sources monitored by the Sports Council. They do not include local sponsorship, for which no estimates are available and are therefore likely to understate the true extent of sports sponsorship. They cannot conveniently be broken down into estimates for individual sports.

Local Authority Tenants

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what questions his Department has agreed shall be put to local authority tenants, for the purposes of research into their attitudes towards a change of their landlord, being carried out by the British Marketing Bureau; what information his Department has agreed shall be given to local authority tenants about the implications of a change of their landlord, for the purposes of this research; and if he will lay a copy of the questions and the information in the Library;

(2) (a) which local authority areas have been selected, for the purposes of research into the attitudes of existing council tenants towards a change of their landlord, commissioned by his Department from the British Marketing Bureau; and on what basis these areas were selected and (b) how many local authority tenants have been interviewed in each area for the purposes of this research and on what basis these tenants have been selected;

(3) (a) for what purpose his Department has commissioned the British Marketing Bureau to carry out research into the attitudes of existing local authority tenants towards a change of their landlord, (b) when this research was commissioned, and over what period it is being carried out, (c) to what use his Department intends the results of this research to be put; and when, how and to whom the findings will be made available and (d) what is the cost of this research.

Mrs. Roe: Tenants on a number of estates were invited to help identify factors important in a tenant's choice of landlord. The research, costing £11,750, is being carried out by the British Market Research Bureau to assist in the development and evaluation of policy. The consultants were commissioned in January 1988 to report at the end of May. Fieldwork involving two groups of 10 tenants took place in each of eight local authorities, between 21 March and 7 April. The local authorities varied in terms of size, type of area and authority. We are seeking the consent of the authorities concerned to publication of their names, and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when their replies have been received. The research method involved group discussions, based on topics, rather than on formal questions, designed to stimulate discussion among tenants and to elicit their views about landlords. When we receive the consultants' report, we shall consider publication.

GLC (Seaside and Country Homes)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress by the London residuary body in the disposal of the former Greater London council seaside and country homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: On 28 March the London residuary body sold the seaside and country homes to North British Housing Association, and completed an agreement reserving future lettings for elderly Londoners.

Showman's Guild

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if officials of his Department have met representatives of the Showman's Guild to discuss planning problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley [holding reply 12 April]: I know of the problems encountered by some show people in finding permanent sites suitable as bases to accommodate themselves and their families and to maintain their equipment. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) has been in touch with the local authority associations to ascertain the extent and nature of the problem, and my officials have met representatives and members of the Showmen's Guild for Great Britain. We are considering the material submitted by the associations and the guild.

Hyson Green Flats, Nottingham (Sale)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exercise his powers under section 22(2) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to require the National Audit Commission to direct an extraordinary audit of the accounts of the Nottingham city council in respect of the sale of the Hyson Green flats site for £3·7 million in the light of its market value of £10 million; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No. I understand that the auditor is already investigating this matter.

Rating Reform

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is yet in a position to update his estimates of the impact of the community charge on individual households.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to the reply, 13 January 1988, c. 278]: The Government have now decided on the taper to be used in calculating entitlement to community charge rebates under the new system.

Under the Government's existing proposals, all those receiving income support—the successor to supplementary benefit—will have their rates, or in future their community charge bills, reduced by 80 per cent. so they will pay only 20 per cent. of the community charge for the area in which they live. In addition, their income support will include an amount to help meet the 20 per cent. charges that they do have to pay.

Those with incomes above the income support level will also be eligible for rebates of up to 80 per cent. according to their circumstances. In 1988-89, with domestic rates, the amount of their rebate is reduced by 20p for each £1 increase in their income. The Government have now decided that, when the community charge is introduced, rebates should be calculated on the basis of a lower "taper", of 15p for every additional £1 of income. This means that the amount of community charges of those on low incomes will rise more slowly as their incomes increase. Their rebate will be reduced by only 15p for every £1 rise in their net earnings above the income support level.

This reduced taper will come into effect when the community charge is introduced—in Scotland in 1989 and in England and Wales in 1990.

Four million people will receive the maximum 80 per cent. reduction. If a 20 per cent. had been used for the community charge, about a further 4 million people would have received reductions of up to 80 per cent. With a 15p taper, rebates will extend further up the income scale, One million additional adults will have their community charge bill reduced. About 9 million people will pay reduced charges, and about 5 million people with incomes above the income support level will have larger reductions in community charge than they would have had with the 20p taper.

Of these 5 million, about three quarters are people who do not pay income tax.

This improvement in the rebate proposals achieves a better targeted result than the new clause I proposal for a 50 per cent. community charge for those who do not pay income tax. But it does so by a simpler and much less bureaucratic route, with no anomalies, and one that avoids the earnings trap which new clause I would produce. It does not require an amendment to the Local Government Finance Bill.

DEFENCE

Morocco

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the purpose of the recent Royal Air Force official visit to the Kingdom of Morocco.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is normal practice, in the interests of good relations, to maintain links with a wide range of friendly countries, including the Kingdom of Morocco. The recent visit by the Chief of the Air Staff was intended particularly to strengthen links between the Royal Air Force and the Moroccan air force and discuss matters of common interest.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people were made redundant at Devonport dockyard between 1 March and 6 April.

Mr. Sainsbury: The primary responsibility for redundancy in the royal dockyards rests with the contractors. However, my Department will have paid compensation to 668 ex-Civil Service employees (500 industrials, 168 non-industrials) who left Devonport dockyard in the period 1 March to 6 April this year.

Project Waterfront

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Project Waterfront.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has no such project.

British Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the companies exhibiting products or services at the British Army equipment exhibition between 26 June and 1 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In line with previous exhibitions the list of companies exhibiting products or services at the British Army equipment exhibition 88 will be published on 26 June 1988.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to allow Amnesty International to have a stall at the British Army equipment exhibition in Aldershot between 26 June and 1 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The British Army equipment exhibition is an exhibition to allow United Kingdom defence industry to show its products. Amnesty International is not part of the United Kingdom defence manufacturing industry.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries whose representatives have been invited to the seventh British Army equipment exhibition at Aldershot from 26 June to 1 July 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In common with all my predecessors, I do not intend to publish a list of countries invited to the British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visitors are expected at the British Army equipment exhibition in Aldershot between 26 June and 1 July.

Mr. Sainsbury: Based on previous exhibitions, a total of some 25,000 visitors are expected to attend BAEE in Aldershot between 26 June and 1 July.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the total cost for organising the British Army equipment exhibition between 26 June and 1 July; and who will perform the opening ceremony.

Mr. Sainsbury: The cost of the British Army equipment exhibition, which we estimate will be £2·4 million, will be fully recovered from the participating companies. The opening ceremony will be performed by Secretary of State for Defence.

Bangladesh (Military Training)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any military training is being provided by United Kingdom military personnel in Bangladesh.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The only military training provided by the United Kingdom is given by the three officers of the British military advisory team at the Bangladesh defence services command and staff college.

Military Training

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries whose military personnel have received training within the United Kingdom or in the United Kingdom bases overseas in each of the last three years.

Greenham Common

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many cases of trespass have been reported at Greenham common since January 1987.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Eight hundred and twelve cases of trespass were recorded between 1 January 1987 and 7 April 1988.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Plant Testing and Seed Certification

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on the review of plant variety testing and seed certification in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friends and I have now received a report from the team of officials set up to conduct this review. I am arranging for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

We welcome receipt of this report which makes a comprehensive study of the operation of the systems for plant breeders' rights, the national listing of plant varieties and seed certification in the United Kingdom. It concludes that the systems have served the industry well in the past but that change is now required to meet the needs of plant breeders, the seed industry, farmers and growers, and the processing industry. The report makes a large number of recommendations which would change procedures, increase cost effectiveness and efficiency, and alter the funding arrangements. In order to allow full consideration of these recommendations, we intend to publish the report straightaway and invite all interested parties to comment on its findings.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the cases of detected fraud within the common agricultural policy; and what is being done to halt this malpractice.

Mr. MacGregor: In the period from 1984 to 1987 inclusive there have been 31 cases of detected fraud in the United Kingdom under the CAP. Of these 17 were settled out of court and 14 were prosecuted, leading to three prison sentences and fines totalling £29,950. In addition, there were some 300 cases where action was taken to recover payments made irregularly.

Rigorous checks are made by this Ministry, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce to deter and detect fraud under the CAP. I am also pressing other member states and the Commission to step up co-ordinated action against fraud across the Community.

Port Talbot Harbour and Channel (Spoil)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to reject the application to dump 11 million tonnes of capital spoil arising from Port Talbot harbour and channel in the Bristol channel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am currently considering all aspects of an application to dump at sea dredged spoil from Port Talbot harbour and channel, including possible disposal sites. Applications for dumping of dredged spoil must be considered under the licensing provisions of part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. Licences are not issued unless careful scientific examination shows the operation to be acceptable in terms of its impact on the marine environment, the living resources that it supports and human health, and unless it conforms to the relevant international conventions. The practical availability of alternative methods of dealing with the spoil is also taken into account.

Written Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Departmental Memoranda

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has any plans to increase the security of internal departmental memoranda; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not the usual practice to give information on such matters.

National Curriculum (Staffing Levels)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning the implications of the implementation of a national curriculum for staffing levels in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received over 10,000 responses to our proposals; a number of these raised questions about the implementation of the national curriculum, including the teaching and other resources required for it. Our decisions on the phasing of its introduction will take account of all relevant factors, including staffing levels.

Merchant Navy College, Greenhithe

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the proposed closure of the Merchant Navy college at Greenhithe; and what reply he has given.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received representations from right hon. and hon. Members, from the principal and staff of the college, and from parents or employers of past, current and prospective students.

While recognising that the college has won praise for the quality of its work; the question of its future is a matter for the college itself and for the Inner London education authority which maintains it.

Education Assets Board

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the emoluments to be paid to the chairman of the education assets board; and what other posts in the public service the chairman holds.

Mr. Jackson: The chairman of the education assets board, Mr. Tom McDonald OBE, will be paid £17,330 per annum for a time commitment of two days a week. Mr. McDonald is currently also chairman of the West Yorkshire residuary body and unpaid chairman of the Yorkshire and Humberside and East Midlands industrial development board.

NERC Centre, Barry

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what representations he has received concerning the future of the Natural Environment Research Council's research vessels services centre at Barry in South Glamorgan; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the Natural Environment Research Council's research vessels services centre at Barry in South Glamorgan.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received no representations concerning the future of the Natural Environment Research Council research vessels services centre at Barry in South Glamorgan. The future of the centre is a matter for NERC, and I understand that the council is investigating the feasibility of resiting the centre to Southampton as part of a proposed interdisciplinary research centre on deep sea oceanography.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Extradition

Mr. Gow: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of officials which took place on 7 April to which he referred in his written answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 30 March, Official Report, column 484; when he expects next to meet the Attorney-General of the Irish Republic and when he now expects to agree extradition arrangements with the Government of the Irish Republic.

The Attorney-General: The meeting of officials on 7 April clarified several matters. I am very hopeful that there will shortly be effective extradition between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland under the new Irish legislation.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General who selected the Law Lords to hear the application for leave to appeal by the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: In accordance with the usual practice the principal clerk of the Judicial Office, acting under the general authority of the Lord Chancellor, selected the names of the law lords to sit on the appeal committee which considered the application for leave to appeal in the Birmingham pub bombings case.

As a matter of general practice the Lord Chancellor does not intervene in the arrangements for particular law lords to hear particular cases and did not do so in this case.

PRIME MINISTER

Value Added Tax

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received over the suggested introduction of value added tax charges on children's shoes; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations about value added tax including on children's clothing.

Pakistan (Explosion)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what messages of sympathy have been conveyed by Her Majesty's Government to the bereaved relatives and friends of those killed in the arms explosion in Pakistan, and to relatives and friends of those injured in the explosion; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty the Queen sent a message of sympathy to President Zia, to the families of those who suffered, and to the people of Pakistan. I sent a similar message to Prime Minister Junejo.

Water (Nitrate Levels)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister what is the remit of the Cabinet Office working party set up to look at nitrate levels in drinking water; what external representatives are on the working party; when any recommendations are due to be made; and if the conclusions will be published.

The Prime Minister: It is not the practice to provide such information. I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 26 January 1988 at column 133.

Departmental Correspondence (Confidentiality)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what action her Office has taken to investigate the circumstances of the unauthorised disclosure of recent correspondence between her Office and that of the Secretary of State for Scotland concerning opting out of the educational system in Scotland.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland on 12 April 1988, at column 44, and my reply of 14 March 1988 at column 425.

Visits

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister when she last visited (a) a jobcentre, (b) a Department of Health and Social Security office (c) a military establishment and (d) a trade union office.

The Prime Minister: In the course of each year I visit a wide variety of companies, offices, organisations and establishments. Information going back to 1979 is not immediately available in the form requested. I did, however, recently visit Wellington barracks. I have not visited a trade union office.

SCOTLAND

"Management of Private Practice in NHS Hospitals"

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the Home and Health Department's handbook, "Management of Private Practice in NHS Hospitals".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A copy of the handbook has already been placed in the Library.

Health Boards (Agency Workers)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much each Scottish health board spent on agency workers in the most recent available year; and what percentage this was of their overall nursing costs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Relevant information in health boards' annual accounts is recorded under the category of "non-payroll" nursing costs. While this relates principally to the cost of engaging agency nursing staff, some other expenditure (such as payments for nursing staff in non National Health Service hospitals which have contractual arrangements with health boards) is also included. The figures for 1986-87 are given in the table.

DEFENCE

Military Personnel

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many military personnel have left the armed services in each year since 1974;

(2) how many military personnel have left the armed services at the end of a fixed term of service in each year since 1974;

(3) how many military personnel have left the armed services for medical reasons in each year since 1974;

(6) how many military personnel have left the armed services for reasons other than (a) end of a fixed term of service, (b) medical reasons (c) retirement age (d) dismissal, in each year since 1974.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the numbers leaving the armed forces by cause in each financial year are shown in the table. It is not possible to distinguish between exits at the end of a fixed term of service and exits at retirement age and a single category covering these two groups has therefore been shown. This category includes those leaving the Army having given notice. The numbers shown as dismissed include administrative dismissals as well as disciplinary discharge.

Hanover Air Show

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to visit the Hanover air show in May.

Mr. Younger: I hope to do so subject to the pressure of Government business.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of complaints received about low flying in 1987 were identified as relating to (a) fast jets, (b) light jet trainers, (c) heavy propellor-driven aircraft, (d) light propellor-driven aircraft and helicopters.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The proportion of complaints and inquiries about low flying received in 1987 identified as relating to fast jets, light jet trainers, heavy propeller-driven aircraft and light propeller-driven aircraft and helicopters is, respectively, 71·4 per cent., 0·1 per cent., 2·1 per cent. and 2·7 per cent. In the remaining 23·7 per cent. of cases the type of aircraft involved is not known.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of complaints received about low flying in 1987 were identified as relating to (a) British military aircraft, (b) United States air force aircraft and (c) other military aircraft.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The nationality of the aircraft involved is rarely mentioned in complaints, and the majority of complaint records do not include this information. Where it is available, in 5·71 per cent. of all cases, the percentages of the total relating to British military aircraft, United States air forces aircraft and other military aircraft are 4·51 per cent., 1·18 per cent. and 0·02 per cent. respectively.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low flying sorties were carried out over (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland during 1987.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Fixed-wing low-flying training is not currently undertaken in Northern Ireland. Otherwise, a typical low-level sortie covers some 300-500 miles and commonly covers more than one of the areas mentioned. The information requested is not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Baltic States

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the question of the self-determination of the Baltic states under principle VIII of basket 1 of the Helsinki Final Act at the current review conference in Vienna; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to do so. Our position of de facto but not de jure recognition of the incorporation of the Baltic states into the Soviet Union is well-known. Our delegation in Vienna have raised a number of human rights violations which have taken place in the Baltic states.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to when the inquest on the shootings of the three Irish Republican Army members in Gibraltar will take place.

Mr. Mellor: The timing of the inquest into the deaths of the three IRA terrorists is a matter for the coroner in Gibraltar. A date has not yet been fixed for the inquest hearing.

Western Sahara

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice is made available to British travel companies as to the inadvisability of offering holidays in the western Sahara, the war zone of the conflict between the Polisario guerillas and the Moroccan army, in view of the fact that a number of holiday makers have been killed in that area.

Mr. Eggar: Our current advice is that the territory of the western Sahara is disputed and the United Kingdom regards sovereignty as undetermined.

Much of the territory is under military jurisdiction and travel is subject to restriction. We have no diplomatic representation in the territory and normal consular services are not available. We would, therefore, discourage travel outside the tourist areas.

To the best of our knowledge there are no organised tours to the area.

Pakistan (Explosion)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for information about the names of the dead and injured in the recent explosion disaster in Pakistan to be available and for telephone inquiries for information to be received from British citizens or overseas nationals, settled in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embasssy in Islamabad reports that its checks have not revealed any deaths or injuries amongst the British community.

Inquiries about the safety of non-British nationals in Pakistan should be addressed to either the Pakistan embassy in London or the authorities in Pakistan.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been offered by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Pakistan to relieve suffering following the armament explosion disaster; what assistance has been sought of Her Majesty's Government by the Pakistant Government; and if Her Majesty's Government will make a contribution to any disaster appeal established in Pakistan.

Mr. Eggar: My noble Friend, Lord Trefgarne, who was in Islamabad at the time of the disaster, asked the Pakistan Prime Minister to let us know if there was any assistance which we could provide. If a specific request for help is received, we shall do what we can to meet it.

South African Embassy

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sums were paid to his Department in compensation for damage to the South African embassy following the conviction of Mr. Adam Bowles and two associates of offences during an anti-apartheid demonstration.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Adam Bowles was sentenced at Southwark crown court on 23 March to 14 days' imprisonment. His two associates were conditionally discharged and ordered to pay £250 each compensation for damage, the payment to be made within 60 days. No payment has yet been made.

Immigration

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of dealing with a genuine application for immigration into the United Kingdom from Bangladesh (a) where DNA fingerprinting is used to verify the genuineness of the application, and (b) where only existing administrative techniques are used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of commercial DNA testing is met by those who initiate it. The time taken to process cases, whether or not DNA testing is involved, varies considerably from case to case. For this reason costs are not broken down as to type of application or on an individual basis.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Budget Changes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount by which the increased revenues from changes in taxes and duties announced in his Budget Statement will be offset by additional expenditure on benefits and other payments linked to the retail price index; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The direct impact on the retail price index of the changes in taxes and duties announced in the Budget is estimated to be an increase of 0·4 per cent. The cost of a corresponding increase in social security benefits linked to the index from April 1989 is estimated to be about £165 million in 1989-90. Other payments directly affected by changes in the retail price index include public sector pensions. However, these costs are not additional to the Government's public expenditure plans set out in the public expenditure White Paper Cm. 288 for two reasons:

(a) the impact of the Budget measures on the retail price index is not additional to the assumption on inflation underlying the provision for social security; indeed, the forecast of the increase in the retail price index to the fourth quarter of 1988 published at the time of the Budget is slightly lower than was assumed at the time of the White Paper;

(b) the plans included large unallocated reserves of £7 billion in 1989-90 and £10·5 billion in 1990-91 which will be available to meet unforeseen requirements, including any revised estimates of demand-led expenditure; and

(c) the reduction in income tax announced in the Budget should have the effect of reducing social security expenditure by about £30 million in a full year.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will commission an audit of Government expenditure by region.

Mr. Major: All central Government expenditure throughout the United Kingdom is subject to audit by the National Audit Office. HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Service Broadcasting

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government plans for public service broadcasting in the next decade.

Mr. Renton: We have it in mind to publish a White Paper within the next few months setting out proposals for the future of broadcasting, including public service broadcasting which will continue to play a major part in the broadcasting system in the 1990s.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of present national and international methods of control of the laundering of illegal drug trafficking money.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The powers to trace, freeze and confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking in the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 provide an effective new weapon against drug trafficking and money laundering. Intelligence about the financial activities of suspected drug traffickers is now co-ordinated centrally in the national drugs intelligence unit. We recently signed an agreement with the United States on co-operation in this field, and we expect to conclude further such agreements this year. We are also active in discussions in the Council of Europe and the United Nations towards more effective international co-operation.

London Roads (Access)

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many weekends during (a) January, (b) February and (c) March, public access to roads in central London was restricted in order to allow demonstrations to take place; in each case to which roads access was impaired and for what period; and whether he expects such restrictions to increase during the summer months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, in relation to larger demonstrations, he issued directions enabling constables to stop or to divert vehicular and pedestrian traffic in central London on two weekends in each of January and February and on one weekend in March (when two separate directions were made). I have placed copies of the directions in the Library which give their duration and which show the roads affected. The number of directions issued during the summer is expected to decrease.

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the actions taken following the arrests under the Prevention of Terrorism Act of (i) Dierdre Whelan, (ii) Patrick Shanahan, (iii) Tina Smith, (iv) Pamela Kane, (v) James Keegan, (vi) Hugo Reavey and (vii) David Kane and with particular reference to (a) the length of time each was held prior to any charge, (b) which of them were released bail having been charged, (c) which of them were released without charge, (d) what criminal charges have been preferred and against whom and (e) at what stage each was allowed to see a solicitor.

Mr. Hurd: No charges were brought against any of those named. Martina Smith was told at the start of her detention that she could have access to a solicitor and David Kane saw a solicitor within 24 hours of his detention. Deirdre Whelan, Patrick Shanahan, Pamela Kane, Joseph Keegan and Hugo Reavey were all allowed access to a solicitor after they had been detained for 48 hours.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostels there are in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: There are 16 approved bail hostels in England and Wales and a further 85 approved probation/bail hostels, the majority of which provide places for persons on remand.

Bail Beds

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail beds are currently available to the courts in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: There are 248 places available in approved bail hostels and a further 1,593 in approved probation/bail hostels, the majority of which are available to persons on remand.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners occupied a place in a bail hostel during (a) 1986 and (b) 1987 in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: In 1986, at all approved probation/bail and bail hostels in England and Wales, 410 places were occupied on average each month by persons on remand; the corresponding figure for 1987 was 538. Based on an average length of stay of nine weeks it is estimated that 2,378 persons on remand occupied approved hostel places in 1986 and 3,120 occupied places in 1987.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many remand prisoners who were resident in bail hostels absconded during (a) 1986 and (b) 1987;

(2) how many remand prisoners who were resident in bail hostels committed a further offence whilst on bail during (a) 1986 and (b) 1987.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a statement concerning the outcome of his Department's pilot study into the use of DNA fingerprinting for the identification of genuine applicants for immigration into the United Kingdom; and if he will provide statistics evidencing the use of DNA testing techniques during the pilot study, and the results.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend expects to place a copy of the report of the pilot trial in the Library shortly. The report will include statistical information about the outcome of DNA tests during the trial.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers arriving at Heathrow airport from abroad during 1987 were new arrivals to the United Kingdom; and how many were referred for medical examination on arrival.

Mr. Renton: Information about the total number of new arrivals is not available, but in 1987 14,387 passengers were given leave to enter for settlement on first arrival at Heathrow airport. In the 12 months 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987 34,708 passengers at Heathrow were referred by immigration officers for medical examination. This figure includes other categories in addition to settlement cases. The figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers are employed at Heathrow airport; and how many are medically qualified.

Mr. Renton: On 29 February 1988, 533 immigration officers were in post at Heathrow airport. As far as I am aware, none is medically qualified.

Heathrow Airport (Medical Checks)

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the procedure for checking the medical condition of passengers arriving from abroad at Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Immigration officers have the power to refer for medical examination any passenger subject to control who (a) intends to remain in the United Kingdom for more than six months; (b) mentions health or medical treatment as a reason for his visit; (c) appears not to be in good health; or (d) appears to be mentally or physically abnormal.

Immigration officers also have discretion, which the immigration rules require them to exercise sparingly, to refer for examination in any other case. Medical examinations are conducted by port medical inspectors, appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers on flight BA 222 from Islamabad which arrived at Heathrow airport on the evening of Monday 11 April were referred for medical examination; and how many received subsequent treatment.

Mr. Renton: Twenty-four, none of whom was referred for treatment as a result.

Prisoners (Suicide)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners in police or court cells committed suicide between 1 April 1987 and 31 March; and how many of these were on remand.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There were no deaths in police or magistrates court cells, between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988, in which a coroner's inquest returned a verdict of suicide. There were three instances where an open verdict was returned. In a further case the inquest is pending. None of these prisoners was on remand.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners committed suicide between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988; and how many of these were on remand.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Verdicts of suicide have been returned on 31 inmates who died in prison department establishments in England and Wales between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988. Thirty of these were male, of whom 18 were on remand; the one female was also on remand. Inquests are yet to be held on eight other inmates (all male, four of whom were on remand) who die in prison department custody during the period in question and whose deaths are thought to have been suicide.

South Africa (Trade Ban)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent action Her Majesty's Government have taken to secure the return to the United Kingdom of the four business men accused of smuggling goods to South Africa in breach of a trade ban, who broke their undertaking, given as a condition of bail, to return to the United Kingdom to face those charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The United Kingdom has no extradition treaty with South Africa, and therefore no means of securing the return of these men. Bail of £400,000 has been forfeited.

Civil Defence

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the state of Britain's civil defence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Civil defence arrangements are kept under continual review.

Prisons (Contract Provision)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Government will reply to the fourth report of the Select Committee on Home Affairs on contract provision of prisons, published on 6 May 1987, HC 291.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: I have today written to my hon. Friend setting out the Government's response to the report. I have mentioned in particular my intentions, which I announced to the House on 30 March, at columns 1083-85, as part of the measures I am taking to deal with the current and projected growth of the prison population, to invite the private sector to make proposals for the faster provision of urban remand facilities and open prisons; to publish a Green Paper and set up a consultancy on the scope for involving the private sector in all aspects of the remand system; and to examine the possibility of the private sector providing and managing secure bail hostels. I am arranging for a copy of my letter to be placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC (Chief Constable)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his reasons were for asserting recently that the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary was to meet his Garda counterpart.

Mr. Tom King: The Chief Constable of the RUC and the Commissioner of the Garda Siochana attended a meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 25 March.

Sinn Fein

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any proposals to seek to limit Sinn Fein's access to the broadcasting media in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: No, but all measures which might assist the combating of terrorism are kept under review.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what are the present rates of grant for planting conifers and broadleaves; whether he proposes to amend the woodland grant scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply given to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) on 23 March 1988, at columns 167-68.

RUC Code of Conduct

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place a copy of the Royal Ulster Constabulary code of conduct in the Library.

Mr. Tom King: The guidance to officers entitled "Professional Policing Ethics" has been incorporated in chapter 1 of the RUC manual which is issued to each member of the force. The Chief Constable has agreed that this guidance should be publicly available. At his request, therefore, I have today placed a copy in the Library of both Houses and copies are available in the Vote Office.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the sum allocated to the Sea Fish Industry Authority for boat building grants in each year since 1984-85 (a) in cash terms and (b) at 1987 prices.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is as follows:

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which newspapers and other publications were invited to his Ministry's press conferences on Chernobyl on (a) 21 April 1987 and (b) 21 March 1988.

Mr. MacGregor: No press conferences on Chernobyl were held by my Ministry on 21 April 1987 and 21 March 1988. However, officials did give background briefings, as they do from time to time on various issues.

EMPLOYMENT

Institute of Personnel Management (Exhibition)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the 75th anniversary of the work of the Institute of Personnel Management in the Upper Waiting Hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: The Institute of Personnel Management has invited me to open this exhibition on 23 May, and I have accepted.

ACAS (North-West Branch)

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in how many cases the north-west branch of ACAS has been involved or instrumental in producing a settlement.

Mr. Nicholls: I understand from the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service that in 1987, the latest complete calendar year for which figures are available, ACAS north-west region was involved in conciliation in 245 disputes. A settlement, or progress towards a settlement, was achieved in 209 (85.3 per cent) of these cases.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has about the employment and industrial background of serving members of the north-west region ACAS board.

Mr. Nicholls: ACAS has no regional boards.

TRANSPORT

Thrapston Bypass

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when construction work on the A1/M1 link Thrapston bypass will start.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Construction work on this section is programmed to start towards the end of this year.

Concessionary Bus Fares

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has monitored changes arising in the provision of concessionary bus fares for children arising from the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department sought information from local authorities on a voluntary basis in 1986-87 about their concessionary fares schemes. The information supplied is still being analysed. But the preliminary indications confirm that, as I stated in reply to the hon. Member's similar question on 20 July 1987, some local authorities have used the powers introduced under the Transport Act 1985 to provide for new or improved concessionary fares for children, but in most cases there has been no change.

Public Service Vehicle Licence Test

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average waiting time for a public service vehicle licence test in (a) Scotland, (b) Orkney and (c) Shetland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The average waiting time for public service vehicle driving tests in Scotland is five weeks. Arrangements for tests on Orkney and Shetland depend on the level and incidence of local demand. On average the waiting time for tests on the islands is about eight weeks.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications for public service vehicle tests were received in 1987 from (a) Scotland, (b) Orkney and (c) Shetland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not readily available. Some 2,711 test appointments were booked in Scotland in 1987. Four tests were conducted in Orkney and 16 in Shetland.

Tourist Coaches

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the impact of tourist coaches on traffic movement on roads for which he is responsible near the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Responsibility for all roads in the vicinity of the Palace of Westminster rests with Westminster city council as local highway authority.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department has taken to mitigate the effects of tourist coaches in central London traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic management and the provision of parking for tourist coaches in central London are primarily the responsibility of London borough councils as highway and planning authorities. We encourage local authorities and private bodies to improve existing facilities and provide additional ones.

We issued a report on tourist coaches in London in 1986. Copies were placed in the Library of the House. More recently we have co-operated with the Bus and Coach Council, Westminster city council, the Metropolitan police and the London tourist board in developing a code of practice. This was launched on 2 March. It should lead to better routeing and parking of coaches.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the current salaries and other remuneration of board members of London Regional Transport.

The total remuneration of board members in 1986-87 is published in the corporation's annual report and accounts for that year, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The corresponding figures for 1987-88 will appear in that year's annual report and accounts, which will be published shortly.

British Rail

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the Government's expenditure on public service obligation grant to British Rail during each year since 1979; and what was the percentage in each of the British Rail's regions.

Mr. David Mitchell: The figures for central Government support for the British Railways Board taken from the final claims for grant in compensation for the public service obligation under EC regulation 1191/69 and section 3 of the Railways Act 1974 in respect of the years since 1979 are as follows:

1979	485·1
1980	575·9
1981	749·2
1982	817·0
1983	853·6
1984-85	1,065·9
1985-86	820·0
1986-87	712·9
1987-88	794·7

1984-85 is a 15-month period reflecting a change in the British Railways Board financial year. The figures for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 remain provisional; final claims have not been agreed. All figures are cash.

The public service obligation grant is not paid on the basis of allocation between British Rail's regions and it is not possible to provide a percentage breakdown between regions.

Road Signs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the total public expenditure on road signs on trunk roads and motorways in England in each year since 1966 at outturn and 1986-87 prices.

Rail Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, separately for freight and passenger trains, all the reported occasions in the last 10 years when locomotive drivers have passed signals at danger; and in which of those incidents wheel slide has been a contributory factor.

Mr. David Mitchell: Signals passed at danger by train drivers are reported to this Department only if a notifiable accident results. The number of collisions attributed to drivers passing signals at danger over the past 10 years is as follows. The numbers involving freight trains and passenger trains separately are not readily available, nor are the numbers in which wheel slide has been a contributory factor.

Collisions caused by train crews passing signals at danger

Year	Number of collisions
1978	1
1979	4
1980	6
1981	7
1982	5
1983	7
1984	5

[1] The figures for 1987 are provisional at this time.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of serious leg injuries sustained by motor cyclists in road traffic accidents result in disability.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 29 March 1988]: Just before Easter, the hon. Gentleman asked what proportion of serious leg injuries sustained by motor cyclists in road traffic accidents resulted in disabilities. The information was not available at the time. I said that I would write.

A transport and road research laboratory study at a hospital accident and emergency department showed that about half of motor cyclists sustaining serious leg injuries were still suffering disability six months after their accident. As this study was at one hospital only, this figure may not be representative of the national situation.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received representations about the funding of the teaching hospitals as part of the National Health Service review.

Mr. Moore: Yes, and we shall bear in mind the importance of medical teaching and research.

West Middlesex University Hospital

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the detailed plans for the redevelopment of the West Middlesex University hospital, set out in the Minister for Health's letter dated 5 March 1987 to the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth, remain generally valid; and if any amendments have been made;

(2) when proposals for the redevelopment of the West Middlesex University hospital were submitted for approval by Her Majesty's Treasury and his Department; and when he expects that approval will be given;

(3) what action he has taken with reference to the approval of phase one of the new West Middlesex University hospital since the debate on the National Health Service on 26 November 1987.

Mrs. Currie: The plans outlined in my right hon. Friend's letter related to the total redevelopment of the hospital, which would cost some £47 million.

The submission on the phase 1 redevelopment of the West Middlesex University hospital is under consideration. A revised submission was received in June 1987. Further information on the proposals has been required, some re-costing work has been necessary, and there have been detailed discussions with the health authority about the provision proposed for elderly mentally ill patients. Proposals of this magnitude will also require Treasury approval. Decisions will be taken as soon as possible.

Detailed work on later phases—which will require separate submissions—is still in progress at the regional health authority.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people will receive reduced housing benefit as a result of the changes in social security in April;

(2) how many people who lose entitlement to housing benefit in April are families with children.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 18 December 1987 at columns 916-18. This continues to be the most up-to-date information available.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) direct, and (b) indirect maternal deaths in England in each year between 1976 and 1978 occurred in National Health Service hospitals without consultant obstetric units; and how many were associated with anaesthesia.

Mrs. Currie: In 1976-78 there were 30 direct maternal deaths directly due to anaesthesia in England and Wales. There were also a further 10 deaths where the administration of anaesthesia made a contribution, and of these deaths five were direct and five were indirect maternal deaths. Information on where death occurred and the type of obstetric unit is not available.

Westfield House, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of repairing the damage done to the reception area of the Westfield house office of his Department in Bradford, including the replacement of reinforced glass screens; when the office will reopen; what arrangements have been made to refer callers to other DHSS offices in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The cost of repairing the damage to the public area, including replacement of reinforced glass screens, has been estimated at between £1,700 and £2,000. It is hoped that the work will be completed in time for the office to reopen to the public by the beginning of the week commencing Monday 18 April. Callers are being directed to Bradford south local office which is situated about one mile away. A notice on the public entrance sets out the alternative arrangements, which have also been publicised in the local press. The public caller office at Shipley is open on Tuesdays and Thursdays and extra staff have been deployed to deal with inquiries.

Performance-related Payments

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 12 April to the hon. Member for Wakefield, what policy objective is served by maintaining the confidentiality of performance-related payments to Health Service general managers.

Mr. Newton: It respects the position of those individuals who do not wish the awards they have received to be made public.

Eye Tests and Dental Examinations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of Tuesday 12 April, how many of the 206,524 eye tests and 652,660 dental examinations were undertaken free of charge in 1986; and for which additional categories charges will be levied under terms of the Health and Medicines Bill.

Mr. Newton: All the 206,524 sight tests and the 662,660 dental examinations carried out in Trent region in 1986 under the general optical and dental services were free of charge. Once enacted the Health and Medicines Bill will permit charges to be made for dental examinations and will confine the NHS sight test to specified groups.

As regards dental examinations, these will continue to be free for children and young people under 18, full-time students under 19, expectant and nursing mothers and people on a low income. This will account for nearly half of the dental examinations provided in the future.

As regards sight testing, a free NHS sight test will continue for children under 16, full-time students under 19, the registered blind and partially-sighted people on a low income and also, as I announced in the House on 14 April 1988, those with diabetes or glaucoma who are referred by the doctor managing their condition. It is estimated that these groups account for over one third of sight tests.

Single Payments (Sunderland)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many outstanding claims for single payments there were at (a) Dunn house and (b) Phoenix house in Sunderland on 11 April.

Mr. Portillo: There were 3,118 single payment claims outstanding at Dunn house (Sunderland, North office) and approximately 7,000 at Phoenix house (Sunderland, South office) on 11 April 1988.

Income Support (Sunderland)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many assessments for income support were outstanding at (a) Dunn house and (b) Phoenix house in Sunderland on 11 April.

Mr. Portillo: The exercise to convert supplementary benefit payments to income support was completed in both these offices by 11 April.

Richmond Terrace (Ministerial Cars)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that ministerial cars are not parked outside his Department's new headquarters in Richmond terrace in such a way as to cause an obstruction to those seeking to enter the building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I am not aware of a general problem resulting from the existing arrangements although current work to complete the building sometimes causes some necessary short-term disruption to Ministers, staff and visitors to the building.

Income Support Regulations

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government will take steps to ensure that any British citizens or overseas nationals, settled in the United Kingdom, who visit Pakistan for urgent family reasons arising from the recent explosion disaster in Pakistan are not penalised on their return under the provisions of the new social security regulations, relating to the effect on benefit entitlements of time spent outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: The new Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 and the Income Support (General) Amendment Regulations 1988 carry forward into income support the former rules for the payment of supplementary pensions and allowances during absences abroad. Under these rules certain people who are not required to be available for work for income support purposes and who temporarily go abroad remain entitled to income support for the first four weeks of absence. If the absence abroad results in a break in entitlement, that break will lead to the immediate loss of any transitional addition of less than £10, and to the loss, after eight weeks, of transitional additions of £10 or more. In the case of certain unemployed couples, breaks in entitlement of eight weeks or more will lead to the loss of the higher (£15) earnings disregard.

If a husband and wife go abroad and the wife is widowed while in Pakistan she will be entitled to widow's payment if she returns to the United Kingdom within four weeks of her husband's death.

We have no plans to change these rules.

Social Security Provisions

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for British citizens or overseas nationals settled in the United Kingdom, who are dependent on benefit, to be able to apply for help towards their expenses to travel to Pakistan for urgent family reasons, arising from the recent explosion disaster in Pakistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: It would be inappropriate to make provision in this way since the social security system is not, and was not previously, designed for this purpose.

Foreign Visitors (Medical Examinations)

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the variety of medical conditions found amongst those passengers who arrived at Heathrow airport during 1987 and were referred for examination on arrival; and how many were refused entry on medical grounds.

Mrs. Currie: The principal port medical officer at Heathrow has listed the following medical conditions as found amongst passengers arriving at Heathrow airport between 1 April 1986 and 31 March 1987 referred to the health control unit:

Tuberculosis
Malaria
Pyrexia of unknown origin
Hepatitis
Food poisoning
Dysentery
Diarrhoea
Typhoid

In 1987, the number of those refused entry on medical grounds at Heathrow airport was 41.

Social Fund

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will redistribute social fund budgets between the local office at Liverpool, West Derby, and Liverpool, Edge Hill.

Mr. Scott: Following the announcement of social fund allocations in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November 1987, at columns 774-81, the local office at Liverpool, Edge Hill has assumed from the local office at Liverpool, West Derby the responsibility of serving the residents of the postal district Liverpool 13. Accordingly, the allocation to Liverpool, West Derby has been reduced proportionately and the money reallocated to Liverpool, Edge Hill. The new allocations are as follows:

	Grants budget £	Loans budget £
Liverpool, West Derby	70,780	167,504
Liverpool, Edge Hill	258,534	714,113

Income Support

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether women who have left the marital home for fear of violence will be excluded from income support where their share of the marital home exceeds £6,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: It is not our policy to deny income support to the partner who has left the marital home in the event of marital breakdown simply because of the capital value of her or his share in the home. We shall propose amending regulations as soon as possible so as to be able to disregard the person's interest in the property until its value can be realised. In the interim, arrangements have been made to pay such claimants the amounts that they would have received had income support been payable.

National Health Service Administrators

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish all annual figures available to him on the numbers and ratio of administrators to total staff in the National Health Service.

Reduction in total staff since 1983 is mainly due to effects of competitive tendering of ancillary staff services.

ENVIRONMENT

Lower Don Valley

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what type of partnership was recommended for the regeneration of the Lower Don Valley in the Coopers and Lybrand report, jointly sponsored by local and central government.

Mr. Trippier: The Coopers and Lybrand report, which was jointly sponsored by the Government, local business and Sheffield city council, considered a range of management mechanisms including an urban development corporation. The preferred option was for an urban regeneration project, but this could not guarantee the necessary resources to secure the regeneration of the lower Don Valley. An urban development corporation would bring that certainty.

Water (Nitrate Content)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases have been reported in the past 12 months in the Nottingham area of water containing nitrate in excess of the European Economic Council recommended levels.

Mr. Moynihan: One water supply serving the Hucknall area of Nottingham has marginally exceeded the EC drinking water directive limit for nitrate during the last 12 months. Although this level of nitrate is not considered to be a public health risk, the water authority is now drawing up a programme of action which will ensure compliance with the directive.

Water Quality

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the maximum penalty for non-compliance with European Community law relevant to water quality standards in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: European Community measures relevant to water quality standards are contained in directives which are implemented in member states through national legislation. In the United Kingdom the individual laws contain their own penalty provisions.

British Standards Institution

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to implement the recommendations of the Bennett committee published in 1979 in respect of the separation of the standards-making function of the British Standards Institution and procedures for the certification of innovative products.

Mr. Trippier: Following consideration of the Bennett report, the Government concluded in 1980 that the Agrement Board (now the British Board of Agrement), which issues certificates primarily for innovative building products, should remains independent. That remain our view.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the overlap between the roles of the British Board of Agrément and the British Standards Institution.

Mr. Trippier: Under an agreement reached between the chairman of the BSI and the chairman of the BBA in April 1983, the BBA offers "to assess materials, products, systems and techniques for Agrément Certification when there is no relevant British Standard or, if a relevant British Standard exists, when the subject of the certificate:

(a) contains some innovative element of manufacture or use and has a level of performance in use at least as good as that of the material, product, system or technique complying with the British Standard, or

(b) has a performance in use which is substantially better than that of the material, product, system or technique complying with the British Standard."

The agreement goes on to say that the

"BBA will not renew or maintain existing Agrément Certificates once a product or system is fully covered by amendments or revision of existing British Standard specifications or by new British Standard specifications."

A joint BSI/BBA liaison committee meets regularly, under an independent chairman, to resolve any problems as they arise.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to ban the use of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Moynihan: We are in negotiation with our partners in the European Community on a proposed regulation that will bring into force the reductions in consumption of chlorofluorocarbons required by the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer.

Thistlebrook Caravan Site

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the effect of the Appeal Court's judgment that the Thistlebrook caravan site does not meet the requirements of the Caravan Sites Act 1986 on (a) the London borough of Greenwich and (b) local authorities generally; and what steps he is taking to clarify the situation.

Mrs. Roe: We have noted the Court of Appeal's Judgment in Greenwich LBC v. Powell. I understand that the London borough of Greenwich has made application to appeal. We must now await the outcome of that application.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each urban development corporation, the amount of money attracted in investment commitments the amount of public money spent.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

English urban development corporations	Grant-in-aid (cumulative to 31 March 1988) £ million	Estimated private sector investment committed £ million
Black country Development Corporation	2	0·2
London docklands Development Corporation	390	[1]3,000
Merseyside Development Corporation	168	68
Teesside Development Corporation	5	2
Trafford park Development Corporation	10	5
Tyne and Wear Development Corporation	4	5

Note: Figures over £½ million shown to nearest £ million.
[1] (approx).

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each urban development corporation the amount of loans outstanding.

Mr. Trippier: The only English urban development corporation with outstanding borrowing at present is Merseyside development corporation, amounting to £785,000.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken, or plans to take, to ensure that motorists are given full information on the availability of lead-free petrol at filling stations in their areas.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 22 March at column 58.

Toad Tunnels

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many additional toad tunnels have been constructed since May 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: I am pleased to report the recent construction of a further toad tunnel at Stamford Bridge, near York.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his reply of 13 January, Official Report, column 277, if he will state the total amount owed to the London residuary body by Government Departments, what are the subjects of the discussions between the London residuary body about his Department.

Mr. Chope: The total amount owed to the London residuary body (LRB) by Government Departments will not be known until all final audited claims for grants and subsidies have been submitted by the LRB to the appropriate Departments. Discussions between Departments and the LRB are continuing and good progress towards settlements is being made.

My Department has regular meetings with the LRB to discuss a wide range of issues.

Hampstead Heath

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his reasons for agreeing to the transfer of Hampstead heath to the charge of the City of London corporation.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has not yet reached a conclusion on the proposal submitted on 30 March by the London residuary body that its functions, properties, rights and liabilities in respect of Hampstead heath be transferred to the corporation of the City of London.

Pakistan (Visits)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government will provide support for local authorities seeking to assist British citizens, or overseas nationals, settled in the United Kingdom, who are in financial hardship, wishing to visit Pakistan for urgent family reasons arising from the recent explosion disaster in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The main means of central Government support for local authorities is by way of block grant, which is in aid of their services generally. It is entirely for local authorities to decide what provision to make for particular activities.

Local Valuation Panel Offices (Staffing)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take on the recommendations made by Messrs Ernst and Whinney, following its review of the staffing and procedures of local valuation panel officers.

Mr. Chope: I have today placed in the Libraries of the House a summary of the recommendations of the Ernst and Whinney report and the Government's proposals for action on them.

The report made a number of useful recommendations for improving administrative efficiency in local valuation panel offices and making more efficient use of staff. The Government accept the majority of these recommendations. Work is already in hand on the introduction of computer systems and a review of staffing will follow.

Rate Increases

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope), on 13 April, Official Report, column 127, he will explain how the figure for local rate increases is made up; and if he will list in ascending order by class of authority the local rate poundages for all counties, boroughs and districts in England.

Mr. Chope: The local rate for a district or borough is made up from the rate charged by the district itself together with the average of parish precepts and special district expenses and precepts charged by certain other specialised bodies such as waste disposal authorities. It does not include the precepts charged by higher tier authorities, that is, county councils in the shires, police, fire and civil defence and transport authorities in metropolitan areas and London, and the Inner London education authority. A ranked list of the available information on local rates poundages in 1988-89 for districts and boroughs and precepts for county councils by class of authority is as follows.

Peanuts

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of fatalities caused to the British wild bird population by aflatoxin poisoning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 12 April 1988]: I am informed by the Government's advisers on nature conservation matters, the Nature Conservancy Council, that there is no evidence of fatalities caused to the British wild bird population by aflatoxin poisoning.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to ensure that aflatoxin-poisoned peanuts are not sold for use as wild bird food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Controls which exist for levels of contaminants in feeding-stuffs for domesticated animals and birds do not cover materials fed to wild birds. However, officials at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have been in contact with the Pet Food Manufacturers Association (PFMA) on this matter. The PFMA has recommended all its member companies not to use these peanuts—or any other material similarly contaminated—for feeding to wild birds or for any other purpose.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Justices Clerks

96. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to review the training of justices clerks in the juvenile courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Training is provided for magistrates court clerks in the law, practice and procedures of juvenile courts, and such training is kept under review. Following a recent consultancy study on the future provision for staff training in magistrates courts, a unit is to be set up in the Home Office to promote and co-ordiate systematic appraisal of training needs. This will include training needs of staff working in the juvenile court.

Nationality Applications

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent steps he has taken to deal with the backlog in the processing of nationality applications at Lunar house.

Mr. Renton: Good progress is being made with the measures I announced on 16 February at column 863.

Prisoners (AIDS)

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners are known to have contracted the AIDS virus while in custody;

(2) how many of those prisoners identified as HIV antibody positive have had VIR restrictions ordered by a medical officer or stamped on their records.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 April 1988, the prison population of England and Wales included 58 inmates reported as having been identified as HIV antibody positive; 170 such cases had been reported since central monitoring began in March 1985. There is no evidence that any of the inmates became infected while they were in prison custody. It is likely that once identified, all will have been made subject to viral infectivity restrictions. The nature of the restrictions will have varied from case to case.

Police, Probation and Prison Services (Expenditure)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms since 1981-82 in expenditure on (i) the police service, (ii) the probation service and (iii) the prison service.

Mr. Hurd: The increase between expenditure in 1981-82 and estimated expenditure in 1987-88 for the three services, is:

	Cash terms per cent.	Real terms per cent.
Police	65·4	22·9
Probation	76·0	30·8
Prisons	65·0	23·0

Trevor Monerville

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a judicial inquiry into the role of the Stoke Newington police in the arrest and detention of Trevor Monerville.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The allegations about Mr. Monerville's treatment by the police are already being investigated under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority. I understand that the investigating officers continue to be denied access to the relevant medical records by Mr. Monerville's legal representatives, and that this is causing difficulties to the investigation.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Hurd: The amount spent by my Department on official hospitality in 1987-88 was about £44,000.

Horserace Betting Levy Board

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of the chairmen and directors of the Horserace Betting Levy Board; and what are their periods of office and their annual remunerations.

Broadcasting Standards Council

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the name of the chairman of the Broadcasting Standards Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement on this matter shortly.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for leave to remain in Britain made by persons who arrived as visitors and subsequently married a settled person were outstanding at 1 April.

Mr. Renton: This information is not collected.

Lunar House, Croydon

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much overtime, expressed in hours and salary cost involved, have been worked by employees of the immigration and nationality department, at Lunar house, Croydon, since 1 January.

Mr. Renton: The number of hours worked as overtime by staff in the immigration and nationality department at Lunar house between 1 January 1988 and 31 March 1988 was 22,768. The estimated cost of the overtime for the period is £159,000.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports were being held at Lunar house on 21 March and of these how many relate to (a) applications for citizenship and (b) applications for variation of leave.

Mr. Renton: It is not possible to say exactly how many passports are contained in the 45,000 unopened envelopes containing citizenship applications.

As of 11 April, there were 14,000 unopened packages containing passports and relating to applications for variations relating to leave; all these have been received since early March.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters that remained unsigned by his hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) as at 14 April relative to immigration matters.

Mr. Renton: No record is kept of the number of letters awaiting signature but best endeavours are always employed to complete such work as promptly as possible.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Government's views on DNA fingerprinting in immigration cases will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 15 April at column 256.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons initially given temporary admission to Britain were subsequently given leave to remain in Britain on an indefinite basis in (a) 1985, (b) 1986, (c) 1987 and (d) since 1 January, respectively.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Deportation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of persons deported from Britain in 1985, 1986, 1987 and since 1 January, respectively.

Mr. Renton: Figures are available only for the whole of the United Kingdom. The annual totals for 1985 to 1987 were published on 17 March in table 14 of Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Fourth Quarter and Year 1987" (issue 5/88), copies of which are in the Library. The figures for the first quarter of 1988 will be published in the next issue of the bulletin, in June.

Passports

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were made for passports at each of the passport offices in 1985, 1986, 1987 and since 1 January, respectively.

Mr. Renton: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. The table shows the number of new passports issued and amendments made to existing passports in each of the last three years, and in the first three months of this year. It is estimated that about 365,000 applications of all types were at the various stages of processing within the six United Kingdom passport offices at the end of March 1988.

Gipsies (Trespass)

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has had representations about the lack of effectiveness in practice of the provisions of the Public Order Act 1986 in respect of preventing trespass by gipsies on unofficial sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received a few letters from hon. Members and others about the power given to the police in section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986 to direct groups of trespassers to leave land they have occupied. The provision applies equally to all groups of itinerants. Its use is an operational matter for the senior police officer at the scene.

Police National Computer

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made to allow the Guernsey police and the States of Jersey police access to the police national computer.

Mr. Hurd: The Guernsey police and the States of Jersey police have always been able to obtain information from, and to provide information for, the police national computer through individual United Kingdom forces at the discretion of the chief constable concerned. These arrangements have recently been reviewed, following requests by Guernsey police and the States of Jersey police. With the support of the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland), it has been agreed that these forces should henceforth have direct access to the PNC, through terminals situated in the islands. This facility, which will enable the forces to obtain information needed to carry out their duties and to enter information which may assist United Kingdom forces, will be subject to the same conditions as regards the protection of PNC information as apply to all other PNC users.

EC (Passports)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received to date on the proposed introduction of the new European Economic Community British passport.

Mr. Renton: About 40 letters have been received from members of the public, either direct or through hon. Members, since the announcement on 11 February 1987 that the new form of British passport would be introduced from July 1988. In responding to concerns expressed by some correspondents we have made it clear that, although in a common format agreed in 1981 with other member states of the European Community, the new machine readable British passport remains a national one issued under the royal prerogative.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Support Grant

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to the reply of 26 January, Official Report, column 137, he will state (a) the names of the 22 local education authorities engaged in the pilot schemes receiving education support grant and (b) the amounts of education support grant paid in each financial year to date to each authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: Details of the local education authorities involved and the grant paid are as follows:

	Financial years
	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88[1]

[2] Comprising Derbyshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire and Nottinghamshire Local Education Authorities.

[3] Comprising Clwyd, Dyfed, Gwent, Gwynedd, Powys, Mid-Glamoragan, South Glamorgan and West Glamorgan Local Education Authorities.

Polytechnics Governors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the value of the selection contract for new polytechnics governors after the passing of the Education Reform Bill awarded to Tyzack and Partners; and whether this contract was awarded on the basis of open tender.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 3 March at column 626.

AIDS (Video)

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if the anti-AIDS video entitled "Your Choice for Life" was produced with the intention of general exhibition to schoolchildren of secondary school age;

(2) if he will take steps to make available to schools an alternative to the video entitled "Your Choice for Life";

and if he will undertake to include in such a film material stressing the importance of family life from the recent television broadcast entitled "Susie's Story";

(3) if he will make it his policy to ensure that schools choosing to exhibit the anti-AIDS video entitled "Your Choice for Life" give such preparation and follow-up as is necessary to encourage pupils to recognise the effectiveness of chastity before marriage and fidelity within it as the best protection against AIDS;

(4) what steps he has taken to ensure that the contents of his letter accompanying the anti-AIDS video entitled "Your Choice for Life" are known to the teachers concerned in the exhibition of the film.

Mr. Dunn: The video "Your Choice for Life" is designed for pupils aged 14-plus in a supervised setting. The accompanying users' guide for teachers emphasises the importance of follow-up discussion on the family, fidelity and chastity before marriage. Use of the package, and reinforcement of its messages, are matters for individual school's governing bodies, as my right hon. Friend's letter to the chairmen of governors made clear. It is open to governors to adopt alternative or supplementary materials, but the Government themselves have no plans to replace the video.

Personal, Social and Health Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what advice he proposes to give to schools on the role of personal, social and health education in relation to the national curriculum;

(2) what definition of personal, social and health education his Department uses for the purpose of advising schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Personal and social education covers a range of areas of the curriculum, including health, careers, political and environmental education, and economic awareness. Elements of it will be included in what children learn through the national curriculum as cross-curricular themes in science and elsewhere. We acknowledge the valuable part which the provision of personal and social education can play in preparing young people for adult life.

Russian Language

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the reasons why Russian is no longer taught at A-level in state schools in inner London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Individual schools and local authorities decide which A-level subjects they wish to offer. The Government's policy for the diversification of modern language teaching in schools should, however, lead to an increase in the number of state schools offering Russian at both GCSE and A-level.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to encourage the teaching of Russian in state schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The statement of policy, "Modern Languages in the School Curriculum" published in January by the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales encouraged a greater diversity of languages offered in the school curriculum. Russian, together with German, Italian and Spanish, should be one of the languages to benefit most from this policy. The Government are providing grants for pilot projects in some local education authorities in England to prepare and implement plans for diversification.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken to implement the proposals of the Annan report on the teaching of Russian.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Annan report entitled, "The Teaching of Russian" was published 28 years ago and made recommendations about examinations, teaching materials and pupil visits to the Soviet Union. These are matters for examining bodies and local education authorities.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department spent £21,975·44 on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Medical Research

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the proposed expenditure on medical research for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's planning provision for the Medical Research Council, which has responsibility for basic and clinical research, is as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	156
1990-91	152
1991-92	152

These figures will be subject to review in the normal way in this year's public expenditure survey.

The University Grants Committee funds medical school and university infrastructure through its general block grant to the universities, but it is not possible to identify sums going to medical research as such for the above years.

Nor are figures available in respect of medical research charities and the pharmaceutical industry, both of which provide major funding for medical research.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent (a) the Government and (b) the research councils give priority fundings to specific areas of medical research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government fund basic and clinical medical research mainly by allocations to the Medical Research Council, made on the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

The Government have earmarked funds for AIDS research, but it is generally for the Medical Research Council to determine its priorities for funding.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been, for each year since 1975, the expenditure on medical research at 1988 prices.

Mr. Jackson: Since 1975-76, Government funding of the Medical Research Council, which has responsibility for basic and clinical medical research, has been as follows:

(1988-89 constant prices)

	£ million
1975-76	104
1976-77	105
1977-78	98
1978-79	101
1979-80	105
1980-81	112
1981-82	143
1982-83	141
1983-84	143
1984-85	141
1985-86	139
1986-87	141
1987-88	146
1988-89	147

Note:
In 1981-82, £14 million (£20 million at 1988-89 prices) was transferred back to the science budget (MRC) from the Health Departments in respect of funds transferred from the science budget (MRC) to the Health Departments under the "Rothschild" arrangements of 1973-74 to 1975-76.

GCSE

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the academic content of the GCSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCSE is intended to provide an appropriate balance between academic content and understanding and practical applications. It is for the GCSE examining groups and the Secondary Examinations Council to review syllabuses to secure such a balance in practice.

Information Technology Equipment

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will give details of the spending by local education authorities on information technology equipment over and above that spent by individual schools out of capitation allowances broken down by local education authority for each of the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is not available. Local authorities are required to submit returns of their total expenditure on educational equipment, but they are not required to break it down into types. Nor are they required to indicate how much came out of or was spent above the capitation sums allowed to schools. For 1988-89, the Government have approved expenditure of £19 million on "IT in Schools" for support through education support grants. All LEAs have received an allocation but no returns for actual expenditure are yet available. £8·5 million of this sum is available nationally for the purchase of microcomputer systems.

Free School Meals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the numbers of children in each education authority in England, Scotland and Wales who received free school meals up to April because their parents were in receipt of family income supplement and at the discretion of the education authority, respectively.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1987, the latest date for which information is available, the total number of pupils in England authorised to receive free school meals because their parents were in receipt of family income supplement or at the discretion of the LEA were 128,394 and 115,806 respectively. Details relating to individual authorities are published annually in School Meals Statistics, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Information in respect of Scotland and Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales respectively.

Student Unions

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes any changes in the arrangements by which student unions affiliate to, and fund, the National Union of Students.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government recognise that many individual students do not wish to be represented by the National Union of Students; they are also concerned that taxpayers' money made available to student representative bodies should be used to provide services to students and not used for political campaigning. However, to limit freedom of association, by restricting the right of local student unions to affiliate to a national body, would raise complex legal issues. I conclude that it is first necessary to look at the arrangements for student union membership and the provision of services to individual students at both local and national levels.

To this end, I intend to gather on a sample basis up-to-date information on the organisation and cost of student services within institutions, on the legal status of local unions, and on the organisational and financial links between such unions and the NUS. I am confident that institutions and others will wish to co-operate with this survey; and I shall be glad to receive any information or suggestions which interested parties may wish to put forward. On the basis of the information I obtain, I will reach conclusions on the best action to take and will then consult all concerned about these conclusions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

87. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support Her Majesty's Government are prepared to give to the reconstruction of Sri Lanka after the Indo-Sri Lankan agreement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Britain has pledged a grant of £20 million in support of a three-year programme of reconstruction which was discussed at a special meeting of the Sri Lanka aid group in Paris last December. During my visit to Sri Lanka last month I signed an undertaking giving effect to this pledge and had useful discussions with Sri Lankan Ministers about its use.

Rajasthan

91. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government have offered to India as a result of the famine in Rajasthan.

Mr. Chris Patten: In response to the 1987 monsoon failure, in Rajasthan and elsewhere, we have contributed:

£3 million to the Government of India/UNICEF water and sanitation programme;

£250,000 to Christian Aid for village tubewells;

£250,000 to Save the Children Fund and £53,000 to Oxfam for their respective drought relief programmes.

We are also considering a major bilateral village well-drilling project.

All these projects involve Rajasthan, though not exclusively.

Kampuchea

92. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now reconsider the provision of development assistance to Kampuchea.

Mr. Chris Patten: I see no reason at the present time to change our stance on aid to Cambodia. The Government's view is that, while it would be wrong in principle to give development aid to the current regime in Phnom Penh, we are nevertheless prepared to consider providing humanitarian assistance in the context of an internationally-organised relief effort. In addition, we shall continue to provide assistance for Cambodians seeking refuge in the camps along the Thai-Cambodian border.

Sub-Saharan Africa

93. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement regarding aid to sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: Sub-Saharan Africa continues to be a high priority recipient of British aid. In 1986 British aid to the region through bilateral and multilateral channels amounted to about £470 million.

Ethiopia

94. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to seek to visit Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: I hope to visit Ethiopia again later this month.

Rhodesia and Nyasaland

95. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards the treatment of former members of the public service of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland whose pensions have not been taken over by the British Government.

Mr. Chris Patten: Pensions of public servants of the former federation are paid from the Central African pension fund and responsibility for awarding pension increases falls to the three former partner states (Malawi, Zambia and Zimbabwe). However, we are aware that the majority of federal pensioners have not received any pension increases under these arrangements. The British Government are ready to play their part as one of the guarantors of the fund in the talks which are taking place between the former partner Governments to find a solution to the problem.

UNICEF

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was Her Majesty's Government's contribution to UNICEF for each year from 1978-79 to 1987-88 at constant 1979 prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Year	Contributions at current prices (£ million)			1978-79 prices (£ million)
	General Fund	Special Appeals	Total	General Fund	Total
1978-79	4·500	0·664	5·164	4·5	5·2

[2] £3·25 million, originally planned to be paid in April 1986 was paid in March.

[3] Figures for 1987-88 are provisional.

GOBI Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has earmarked any of the Government's 1987-88 contribution for the GOBI programme; and for what purposes.

Mr. Chris Patten: We do not earmark our contributions to UNICEF specifically to GOBI measures (growth monitoring, oral rehydration therapy, breast feeding and immunisation). Through our contribution to UNICEF's general fund we support GOBI programmes and initiatives and some of our contributions to UNICEF's special appeals are primarily for these measures, including immunisation.

Cyclone Bola

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he has made to the New Zealand people to assist in reconstruction in the aftermath of Cyclone Bola.

Mr. Chris Patten: On the advice of our high commissioner in Wellington we provided immediate assistance in the form of a cash grant of £40,000 for the New Zealand Government to allocate for urgent relief work.

Aid Recipients

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the six major recipients of funds from the Overseas Development Administration in each of the last three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

India	India	India
Sudan	Malaysia	Bangladesh
Bangladesh	Bangladesh	Kenya
Kenya	Zambia	Zambia
Indonesia	Kenya	Malawi
Ethiopia	Sudan	Tanzania

1980	1·015
1981	1·058
1982	4·025
1983	9·053
1984	6·016
1985	10·700
1986	10·252

[1] Provisional.

Africa (Aid)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the recommendations of the United Nations advisory group on financial flows to Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: As my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary told the House on 23 March, Her Majesty's Government welcome this report. It is a useful analysis of Africa's debt problem which we were among the first to highlight. We welcome the group's support for the debt initiative by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. We shall study the report and discuss it with our partners.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registries

79. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the present backlog at land registries.

The Attorney-General: Applications for registration have more than doubled over the past five years and rapid growth continues. To meet the increased demand, some 1,745 new posts have been authorised since June 1987, four new offices are being opened and computerisation is being extended to all offices. It is hoped thereby to make rapid inroads into the backlog and to achieve target times for all transactions within the next two years.

Director of Public Prosecutions

80. Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney-General when he next proposes to meet for official discussions the Director of Public Prosecutions; and what he proposes to discuss.

The Attorney-General: I expect to meet again the Director of Public Prosecutions in the near future. We shall discuss matters relating to the Crown prosecution service.

Legal Aid

81. Mr. Steen: To ask the Attorney-General what is the latest estimate of the cost of running the legal aid service in 1987-88.

The Attorney-General: The estimate for total net expenditure on legal aid in 1987-88 is £438·463 million. The latest estimate for the administration of the service is £37·5 million.

"New Statesman" (Material)

82. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Director of Public Prosecutions will give instructions that all the remaining items removed by the police from the office of the New Statesman in connection with inquiries into the alleged unauthorised disclosure of information about Project Zircon should now be returned; if he will list the main categories of material removed; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: With the exception of one item, all such material has already been returned. The material consisted of documents considered by the police to be relevant to their inquiries. The retained item is currently the subject of civil litigation.

Crown Prosecution Service

83. Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a further statement on the progress of the Crown prosecution service.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 26 February 1988 at columns 353-54. I am pleased to be able to refer, too, to the pay offer that the Treasury has recently made to the unions that represent the great majority of lawyers in the Crown prosecution service. This offer would secure a substantial rise in their pay with immediate effect. I am confident that this will lead to a marked improvement in our recruitment figures, and will better reward those who have worked with such commitment since the early days of the service.

"Spycatcher"

84. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give a breakdown of the most recent available figure for the costs of all court actions in respect of the book "Spycatcher".

The Attorney-General: The total amount of costs expended to date in all court actions in respect of the book "Spycatcher" is about £522,000, plus about £90,000 for travelling and subsistence.

Shops Act 1950

85. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his policy towards the enforcement of the Shops Act 1950 in the light of recent court decisions about the extent to which such enforcement is compatible with the treaty of Rome.

The Attorney-General: Enforcement of the Shops Act 1950 is, by virtue of section 71 of that Act, the duty of local authorities, which have the necessary powers. I have accordingly taken the view that action on my part to enforce the Act will only rarely be appropriate. Last month, however, I wrote to the Association of District Councils to request authoritative information about the scale of the enforcement effort. Whether the provisions of any part of the Act may be found to be incompatible with the United Kingdom's obligations under the treaty of Rome is not a question which affects the responsibility for enforcement of the Act.

Wright Case

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General what is his latest estimate of the total costs that Her Majesty's Government have incurred or are liable for the Wright case and ancillary litigation involving the media; and how much of this has already been disbursed, giving particulars for each case.

The Attorney-General: The list of proceedings in connection with the book "Spycatcher", including the litigation against the media in this country and in New Zealand and Hong Kong, with the approximate amount of costs expended to date, is as follows:

Civil Proceedings for Breach of Confidentiality

	Amount £
Australia:
Attorney-General v. Heinemann (Australia) and Wright:	494,500
New Zealand:
Attorney-General v. Wellington Newspapers and Others:	74,000

Attorney-General v. Independent	15,000
Attorney-General v. Sunday Times (including for injunction to restrain threatened contempt):	750
Attorney-General v. Sunday Telegraph; News on Sunday; London Daily News; Evening News:	250

I cannot usefully estimate future costs.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General how much was spent by (a) the Law Officers' Department and (b) the Lord Chancellor's Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

The Attorney-General: The total amount spent by (a) the Law Officers' Department and (b) the Lord Chancellor's Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88 was £2,550 and £16,305·99, respectively.

Mr. Anthony Parnes

Mr. Blair: To ask the Attorney-General if he will deposit in the Library the evidence filed with the court in Los Angeles in support of the application to extradite Mr. Anthony Parnes.

The Attorney-General: No.

Chile (Helicopters)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United States Government about their vetoing of the sale of 10 Sea King helicopters to Chile.

Mr. Eggar: It has been the policy of successive British Governments not to comment publicly on their discussions with other Governments relating to particular defence sales.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Cyprus

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have had any recent discussions with the Government of Turkey on the withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed the problem of Cyprus with the Turkish Prime Minister, Mr. Ozal, in Ankara on 7 April. She reaffirmed the Government's view that good-will gestures by all the parties would make the resumption of intercommunal talks easier.

United Nations Council for Namibia

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government made any financial contribution towards the cost of the conference of the United Nations Council for Namibia in Istanbul on 21 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We did not contribute towards the cost of the conference.

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what status Her Majesty's Government attach to decisions, resolutions and decrees issued by the United Nations Council for Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: Such pronouncements from the council are regarded as null and void.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Eggar: The forecast outturn for spending on official hospitality by both wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the financial year 1987-88 is estimated to be £5·1 million.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to ratify protocol No. 4 and protocol No. 7 to the European convention on human rights; what are the considerations which will influence this decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to ratify protocol No. 4, but we are considering whether to ratify protocol No. 7. In considering ratification, we study the consequences for our law and practice, and the acceptability of these consequences, within the context of our wish to support the work of the Council of Europe so far as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Community Care

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if she plans to meet Sir Roy Griffiths to discuss his report on community care; and if she will make a statement on its conclusions with particular regard to the call for a new ministerial appointment.

The Prime Minister: The Government are considering carefully all the recommendations in Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care, including the proposal for a designated Minister responsible for this area, and we will bring forward our proposals in due course.

Offices of State

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all offices of state to which a disqualification exists on grounds of religion; if she will state in each case the origins of that disqualification; if she will state the denominations and religions excluded from each office; and if she will state the Government's policy towards these prohibitions.

The Prime Minister: The office of Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland may not be held by a Roman Catholic. This disqualification is contained in the Catholic Relief Act 1829, section 12. There are no plans to introduce legislation on this matter.

Newspapers and Periodicals

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what newspapers and periodicals are provided out of public funds for 10 Downing street; and how many of each are purchased.

The Prime Minister: 10 Downing street obtains copies as necessary of a wide range of national, international and regional newspapers, periodicals and magazines.

The Prime Minister: None. There is no such proposal.

Staff Statistics

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister what was the average salary paid to members of her office (a) in 1979, (b) in 1983, and (c) in the latest year for which figures are available.

The Prime Minister: Figures are not now available for 1979 and 1983 and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost. The average salary paid to members of my office in 1987-88 was £18,403.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister how many people were employed in the Prime Minister's Office (a) in 1979, (b) in 1983, and (c) in the latest year for which figures are available.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 12 November 1987 at columns 169-170.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sittings (Suspensions)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when was the last time a Minister of the Crown used the powers in Standing Order No. 10 to move that the proceedings of a sitting be suspended.

Mr. Wakeham: 14 July 1969.

ENERGY

Coal Production

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total amount of coal produced in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, and (c) England in the last year for which full figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1968.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy) on 17 February at column 673.

Sporting Events (Attendances)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he can give of total annual attendance figures at (a) football, (b) cricket, (c) horse-racing and (d) all professional sporting events for the years 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Water

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements the Government have made to comply with the European Community directives with regard to dangerous substances in water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: In England and Wales, water authorities are the competent authorities for implementing European Community directives on the discharge of dangerous substances to the aquatic environment. Guidance on implementation is issued by means of departmental circular; a revised version of the current circular (DOE 18/85; Welsh Office 37/85) will be issued soon. In Scotland, the river purification boards are the competent authorities and receive similar guidance from the Scottish Development Department. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is responsible for implementing the directives in Northern Ireland.

The competent authorities are responsible for authorising discharges containing substances specified in the directives and for setting emission standards. Wherever possible the United Kingdom adopts the quality objective method of compliance. Discharge consents are set to ensure that the concentration of a substance in the receiving water does not exceed that specified in the appropriate directive. Both emissions and the receiving waters are monitored regularly to ensure compliance.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made between Her Majesty's Government and the European Commission for United Kingdom compliance with the European Community drinking water directive.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government provide information to the European Commission in respect of the United Kingdom's compliance with the EC drinking water directive, and in response to any questions which the Commission may have.

Common Land

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government intend to introduce a new Bill for common land as recommended by the Common Land Forum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend announced on 29 January 1987 that the Government accept the case for legislation based broadly on the Forum's report and intends to introduce a comprehensive commons Bill at a suitable opportunity when parliamentary time permits.

Council House Sales

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will send a copy of the results of his Department's survey of tenants' attitudes towards estate sales to the Nottingham city council; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The research, which has been commissioned in a number of local authorities, has been examining the factors which are important in a tenant's choice of landlord. The research is not yet complete, and no separate results from the small sample of Nottingham tenants who participated will be produced. When we have a report, we shall consider whether to publish it.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the trade unions regarding water privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: On 18 April, officials from the Department met representatives of NALGO to discuss the proposed establishment of the National Rivers Authority and the privatisation of the water authorities' utility functions. The water authorities will themselves consult the trades unions on the schemes of re-organisation which they will be asked to prepare once the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill has received Royal Assent.

Right to Buy (Funds)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds will be made available to charitable housing associations to allow tenants who have applied to exercise their right to buy since 1 June 1987 to carry out that right; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Tenants of charitable housing associations do not have the right to buy, but may qualify for a transferable discount under the home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations. £19 million has been allocated for the scheme in the Housing Corporation's cash-limited approved development programme for the current financial year. Applications received from 1 June 1987 are being held on a waiting list; the Department will review the position with the Housing Corporation later this year in the light of expenditure on applications in the pipeline.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the Price Waterhouse report commissioned by his Department on administering the community charge; and what arrangements he is making to publish the report.

Mr. Ridley: I expect to receive the report in May. I am considering how best to disseminate its findings.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the cost of extending the taper on the community charge rebate from 20 per cent. to 15 per cent.; and what additional resources will be allocated for this purpose.

Mr. Howard: The cost is estimated at between £115 million and £130 million in Great Britain at 1988-89 prices, in a full year. Virtually all the cost to individual local authorities of the rebates they make is met by specific grants.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many mentally handicapped people (a) in receipt of severe disablement allowance and (b) not in receipt of severe disablement allowance will not be exempt from the proposed poll tax;

(2) how many severe disablement allowance claimants will be exempt from the proposed poll tax on the grounds that they are severely mentally handicapped.

Mr. Howard: Under the exemption proposed in schedule 1(4) to the Local Government Finance Bill, all those who are exempted from the personal community charge by reason of severe mental handicap will be in receipt of severe disablement allowance. In addition, some mentally handicapped people receiving SDA will be exempt because they are being cared for in hospitals and nursing homes. It is not possible to say how many mentally handicapped people not in receipt of SDA will not be exempt from the community charge. The Government are reconsidering the scope of the exemption for people who are severely mentally handicapped.

Pollution

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of illegal discharges into rivers and streams of silage effluent and other toxic wastes from farms in each water authority area during 1987; and if he will state the number of prosecutions for such offences in each area during that year.

Mr. Moynihan: Final figures are not yet available, but full details of water pollution incidents caused by farm wastes and of prosecutions by water authorities during 1987, will be published in the next few weeks jointly by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Water Authorities' Association.

Housing Association Maintenance Budgets

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions have been imposed on housing association maintenance budgets; what steps have been taken to assess the impact of such restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No restrictions are placed on housing association maintenance budgets. However, for the purposes of establishing associations' eligibility for deficit grants and their liability to surrender rental surpluses, the reasonableness of maintenance expenditure is assessed by reference to prescribed maximum levels known as maintenance allowances. These allowance levels are reviewed annually to take account of price movements, and in addition a survey of maintenance expenditure is planned this year.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list at 1988-89 prices his Department's (a) gross provision and (b) net provision for the Housing Corporation's approved development programme (i) to provide homes for rent, under conventional funding, (ii) to provide homes for rent, under mixed funding arrangements and (iii) to provide homes for sale; and if he will give this information for each year since 1978-79, together with an estimate for 1988-89.

Mr. Waldegrave: The available information is as follows:

Housing Corporation Approved Development Programme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list at 1988-89 prices his Department's initial housing investment programme allocations (a) to local authorities in the north, (b) to local authorities in the north-west, (c) to local authorities in Yorkshire and Humberside, (d) to local authorities in the west midlands, (e) to local authorities in the east midlands, (f) to local authorities in east anglia, (g) to local authorities in the south-west; and if he will give this information for each year since 1978-79, together with an estimate for 1988-89.

Mrs. Roe: The figures are given in the table.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list at 1988-89 prices his Department's initial housing investment programme allocations (a) to English local authorities, (b) to local authorities in Greater London, (c) to metropolitan authorities outside London, (d) to non-metropolitan authorities in the south-east, and (e) to English non-metropolitan authorities; and if he will give this information for each of the years 1979-80, 1981-82, 1983-84, 1985-86, and 1987-88.

Mrs. Roe: The table contains the figures for each year from 1978-79 to 1988-89. I regret that there was an error in the 1978-79 allocation figures given in the reply to the hon. Member for Islington South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 31 March at columns 709-10.

Housing Capital Expenditure

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list at 1988-89 prices his Department's gross provision for local authority housing capital expenditure during each of the years from 1978-79, together with an estimate for 1988-89.

Mr. Waldegrave: Gross provision for local authorities' capital expenditure on housing for each year since 1980-81, expressed in 1988-89 prices, has been as follows:

(1988-89 Prices)

1980-81	3,398
1981-82	3,095
1982-83	3,351
1983-84	3,119
1984-85	2,993
1985-86	2,633
1986-87	2,778
1987-88	3,051
1988-89	3,048

Public expenditure planning for the years 1978-79 and 1979-80 was on a different basis. Figures for those years cannot be provided, except at disproportionate cost.

System-built Houses

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why Estate Action assistance was refused for 1988-89 by his Department to Walsall metropolitan borough council for repair work to the Wimpey no-fines properties in the Blakenall area of the borough.

Mrs. Roe: The Estate Action programme is directed at schemes to revitalise run-down estates, to improve management, and to increase tenant involvement. Walsall's bid for extra resources for Blakenhall did not address itself to enough of these matters to win priority in the programme.

Local Authorities (Rating and Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his statement in the House on 9 March, Official Report, columns 325-7, what is the position of bona fide building contractors and developers who have negotiated genuine schemes with local authorities involving planning gain and an element of barter.

Mr. Waldegrave: Under the proposals announced on 9 March, where a local authority acquires property, or where works are carried out on property which a local authority owns and valuable consideration for the acquisition or the works is given but not in money, then prescribed expenditure will be scored as if the acquisition or works had been paid for in cash. The proposals do not affect the existing provisions under which:

(a) nil prescribed expenditure is scored when land is acquired by way of gift; and

(b) payments which are made to a local authority in accordance with an agreement under section 52 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 but which are not sums received in respect of the disposal of land or other assets are treated as capital receipts which may be used in full to justify additional capital expenditure.

National Sporting Bodies

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to refrain from seeking to influence national sporting bodies in their decisions on overseas tours and other policy matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Decisions on overseas tours and other policy matters are for the governing bodies of sport. In the case of South Africa, the Government remain committed to the Gleneagles agreement and to discouraging sporting links.

Gipsies

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions his Department has made use of each of its powers to effect removal of gipsies from unauthorised sites (a) if the local authority has a full number of designated sites and (b) if it does not; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend has no such powers. The control of unauthorised camping is a matter for the local authority or the landowner concerned, or in certain cases where public order is threatened, for the police.

European Charter of Local Self-government

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards ratification of the European charter of local self-government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government support the broad principles underlying the charter, but we do not accept that the content is appropriate for a binding international agreement. We therefore have no plans to sign or ratify the charter.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 20 January, Official Report, column 758, which of the services listed have now been transferred; and to which successor body they have gone.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 14 April 1988]: Of the services listed in my earlier reply, the housing association loans have been transferred to the boroughs and relevant district councils, and the industrial mortgages have been transferred to the boroughs in which the mortgaged properties are located.

Water Quality

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those waters which fall within the scope of article 1(2)(a) of directive 76/160/EEC and which do not meet the standards set by the directive.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 April 1988]: My hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Patten) announced the results of the 1986 survey of bathing water quality on 30 April 1987, Official Report, column 186. The results of the 1987 survey are being collated.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by region, the number of cases concerning excesses of industrial solvents in drinking water from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 April 1988]: This information is not available.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the capital investment programme of each water authority in England and Wales to meet the requirements of the EEC directive on the quality of drinking and bathing water.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 April 1988]: We are at present discussing these programmes with water authorities as part of the corporate planning round.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects all Britain's bathing beaches to comply fully with the EEC water quality directive.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 April 1988]: The majority of bathing waters in the United Kingdom already meet the standards set out in the directive.

Water undertakings are currently spending some £70 million per year on improvement programmes designed to bring all remaining identified bathing waters up to the directive's standards. The Government will shortly be reviewing progress and timetables with the water undertakings in the light of the 1987 survey of bathing waters.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each water authority the number of derogations sought and received from 1979 to the latest available date due to excessive levels of lead in drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 April 1988]: No derogations have been given for lead under article 9 of the EC drinking water directive. An application was made to the European Commission under article 20 of the directive in 1985 for a five year delay in implementation of the lead parameter in certain areas of the United Kingdom while action was taken in accordance with an agreed programme to reduce lead levels. This programme has been very successful and is now nearing completion in England. At the end of 1987, the number of water supply zones where treatment measures were being or were to be installed had been reduced to 30. These are listed by water authority area:

Water authority	Water supply zones
Anglian	8
Northumbrian	1
North West	16

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the figures given in the Official Report on 24 April 1986, column 235, regarding the anticipated costs of bringing (a) nitrate levels and (b) lead levels in drinking water to those stipulated in EEC directives.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 April 1988]: The Department is currently seeking an update of the nitrate costs from water undertakers. The costs for new water treatment measures to reduce lead levels are about £500,000 for capital and about £500,000 annual running costs. The cost of replacing lead pipes in properties has not changed significantly, although the number of properties requiring such replacements will have decreased since the numbers were last estimated.

Conservation (Payments)

Mr. Wilson To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amounts and beneficiaries of payments made to date by the Nature Conservancy Council, as a result of developments not taking place on sites of special scientific interest since the inception of the scheme.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 12 April 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the Nature Conservancy Council's annual reports, copies of which are lodged in the House Library.

The reports contain figures on the numbers and value of management agreements concluded by the Nature Conservancy Council under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968. Individual agreements are treated as confidential matters between owners and occupiers of sites and the Nature Conservancy Council, and it is not our policy to disclose details. The Nature Conservancy Council has no power to make management agreements under the 1968 Act over land not of SSSI quality.

EMPLOYMENT

Adult Training Scheme

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the criteria for paying supplementary grants in connection with the proposed adult training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Supplementary grants will be available within the new adult programme of employment training to assist in the provision of higher cost training. The criteria for paying these grants are currently being considered by the Manpower Services Commission. The Commission expects to have more detailed information available shortly.

Settle-Carlisle Railway Line

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects his Department to have completed an assessment of the study by John Jarvis and Sons plc on the tourism potential of the Settle-Carlisle railway line area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The study by J. Jarvis and Sons is a welcome contribution to the development of tourism in this very attractive part of the country and is being currently considered. The English Tourist Board and the Manpower Services Commission have both expressed interest in the study's findings.

Labour Statistics

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures for employment in (a) the coal industry, and (b) the electricity using industries.

Mr. Lee: In January 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 143,000 employees in employment in the coal extraction and solid fuels industries in Great Britain. The figure has not been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

Statistics are not kept for the numbers employed in those industries which use electricity as a principal source of energy.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the parliamentary constituencies in which the number out of work and claiming benefit declined by more than 25 per cent. between August 1984 and February 1988, including in the table for each constituency the total for (a) August 1986, (b) February 1988 and (c) the percentage reduction.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants at 9 August 1984 and 11 February 1988, together with the percentage change for each parliamentary constituency in Great Britain where the number of unemployed claimants has fallen by 25 per cent. or more. The figures are affected by seasonal factors and by changes in the coverage of the count.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in (a) Burnley and (b) Pendle have been unemployed for over one year; and what percentage of the work force this represents.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 14 January 1988, the numbers of unemployed claimants who had been unemployed for one year or more in the Burnley and Pendle travel-to-work areas were 1,790 and 1,162 respectively. These totals represent 4·6 per cent. and 3·9 per cent. respectively of the number of employees in employment plus the unemployed in each travel-to-work area.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of people unemployed in (i) Burnley and (ii) Pendle who are (a) 18 to 21 years of age, (b) 22 to 25 years of age, (c) 26 to 30 years of age, and (d) 31 to 35 years of age; and what percentage of each respective age group this represents.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The following table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the Burnley and Pendle travel-to-work areas on 14 January 1988, for the available age groups which most closely correspond with those requested. Unemployment rates by age are not calculated below national level.

14 January 1988

	Unemployed claimants
Burnley travel-to-work area
aged 18-19 years	368
20-24 years	870
25-29 years	662
30-34 years	488
Pendle travel-to-work area
aged 18-19 years	278
20-24 years	682
25-29 years	464
30-34 years	349

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of people registered unemployed in the Tottenham constituency on the latest available date; what proportion of the working population this represents; and what are the corresponding figures for each month since June 1979.

Mr. Lee: My Department does not calculate unemployment rates for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. Unemployment statistics for parliamentary constituencies are available only from June 1983, and are available from the Library.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the change in the number of employees in employment in each of the English regions, in England, and in Great Britain, excluding Northern Ireland, between 1979 and 1986;

(2) what was the change in the number of people employed in (a) manufacturing and (b) the service industries in each of the English standard regions, and in England as a whole between 1979 and 1986;

(3) what was the percentage change in the number of people employed in (a) manufacturing and (b) the service industries in each of the standard English regions, and in England as a whole between 1979 and 1986;

(4) what was the change in the number of people employed in (a) manufacturing and (b) the service industries in Great Britain, excluding Northern Ireland between 1979 and 1986; and in each case what was the percentage change.

Mr. John Lee: The figures are as follows:

Employees in Employment changes in the levels of employment between June 1979 and June 1986

Thousands

	All Employees	Manufacturing Industries		Service Industries
		Numbers	Percentages	Numbers	Percentages
South East	−124	−465	−24·9	441	8·7
East Anglia	60	−6	−2·9	81	20·1
South West	−32	−70	−15·9	68	6·8
West Midlands	−224	−289	−29·3	91	8·5

	All Employees	Manufacturing Industries Numbers	Manufacturing Industries Percentages	Service Industries Numbers	Service Industries Percentages
East Midlands	−37	−112	−18·5	107	14·2
Yorks and Humberside	−225	−246	−34·7	85	8·1
North West	−414	−345	−35·5	−24	−1·6
North	−170	−142	−34·5	24	3·6
England	−1,166	−1,675	−27·0	873	7·6
Great Britain (excl. Northern Ireland)	−1,550	−1,982	−27·9	895	6·8

The figures have not been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

Some of the decrease in the manufacturing figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, computer services and road haulage, previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the move from manufacturing to service sector employment.

"Training for Employment"

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the information in figure 5 of the paper entitled "Training for Employment" for each region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is only available at disproportionate cost.

Job Search Boundaries

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which offices were chosen for the additional questions on job search boundaries which have been piloted in restart interviews from 1 February; and how many interviews have been conducted in each chosen office.

Mr. Lee: The 11 offices in which the form was launched and the number of interviews conducted at each location from 1 February 1988 to 25 March 1988 are as follows:

	Number
Billingham	1,600
Dundee	1,422
Ealing	1,558
Huddersfield	1,192
Leicester	3,115
Plymouth	2,043
Port Talbot	1,240
Preston	1,396
Stoke	2,454
Watford	828
Wimbledon	1,276

Industrial Premises (Inspections)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of registered premises under the factory inspectorate and the number of factory visits by factory inspectors and (b) how frequently, on average, industrial premises can expect a routine visit from a factory inspector, for each year from 1974 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive does not hold information on the number of premises registered with the factory inspectorate for the years 1974 to 77.

The number of registered fixed premises for the years 1978 to 1987 is as follows:

Date	Number of premises
1 January 1978	280,716
1 January 1979	300,718
1 January 1980	309,915
1 January 1981	309,100
[1] 1 January 1982	576,456
1 January 1983	468,609
1 January 1984	393,237
31 March 1985	395,860
31 March 1986	399,885
31 March 1987	401,815

[1] The figure for 1982 is the first of those produced from a computerised database which was based on the Department of Employment census. The database was initially inflated by premises for which the Health and Safety Executive was not the enforcing authority.

Factory inspectors made 153,835 visits to factories in 1974. Information for the years 1975 to 1987 is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The factory inspectorate's programme of preventive visits is planned on the basis of a rating system. There is no fixed period between inspections, workplaces with poor standards, poor management or high risk potential being inspected more frequently. Information is not available on how frequently, on average, industrial premises can expect a routine visit from a factory inspector.

Health and Safety

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the total funding for the Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive for each year from 1974 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The total provision available to the Health and Safety Commission and Executive for each year since 1974 is:

Year	£ (million)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report

(a) the number of deaths, (b) the number of serious and major injuries and (c) the number of employees in the construction industry for 1970 to 1987 inclusive for (i) public, (ii) private and (iii) public and private construction.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is given in the table below.

Note:
The construction industry is as defined by Standard Industrial Classification 1980 (SIC80) Division 5. This definition has been applied retrospectively for the years 1970-1979.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the estimated number of building sites and (b) the number of construction Health and Safety Executive inspectors for the years 1970 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls: The HSE does not keep estimates of the numbers of building sites. All inspectors in the factory inspectorate sector of the HSE may work in construction groups. The number of experienced Inspectors employed on construction work for the years 1979-87 at 1 January is as follows:

Year	Number
1980	87
1981	90
1982	89
1983	88
1984	88

[1] September

No information is available centrally for the years 1970-1978. In addition to the 75 experienced inspectors, there were another 17 qualified inspectors working in construction on 1 September 1987. It is planned to recruit enough factory inspectors to bring the total number of experienced inspectors in construction groups nationally to around 100 by 1990.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how frequently the average building site has been inspected for each year from 1970 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the final outcome, in terms of (a) construction sites visited, (b) prohibition and improvement notices issued and (c) prosecutions initiated for the construction site blitzes carried out by the Health and Safety Executive in 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: During the construction site blitzes carried out by the Health and Safety Executive in 1987, 4,289 construction sites were visited, 1,006 prohibition and 28 improvement notices were issued, and 25 prosecutions were initiated.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which areas of the country, or London boroughs, will be blitzed by construction inspectors during the current year; and when.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive plans to carry out the following construction blitzes in 1988:

April
"Black Country"
Lincoln
Torbay
West Wales
Worcester
London—(North London)

May Bradford
Hertfordshire
North Wales

June
Plymouth
Folkestone

September
Buckinghamshire

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Nicholls: The provisional figure for 1987-88 is £29,000.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how he defined the term "significant employers" in the context of the review of ethnic monitoring practice in the private sector;

(2) what firms or employees were included in the review of ethnic monitoring practice; and on what basis they were selected.

Mr. Nicholls: No review of ethnic monitoring practice has taken place. The figures provided by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in reply to the hon. Member on 30 March 1988, Official Report, columns 526-7, represent information gathered from the normal operational activities of this Department's race relations employment advisory service. No precise definition of "significant" is applied by the service but the major private sector employers visited are those regarded as likely to benefit from specialised advice which can assist the employer to formulate or develop policies and practices which ensure equal opportunity. RREAS provides a confidential service and details of individual organisations visited cannot be given without seeking the consent of those organisations. Resource considerations make this impracticable.

WALES

General Council of British Shipping

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the closure of the Cardiff office of the General Council of British Shipping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None since 1986.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has yet reached a decision concerning the community charge in relation to the residents of Caldey Island, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer my hon. Friend to the letter I wrote to him on 15 April, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Nurses

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurses are currently employed by health authorities in Wales; and how many are undertaking further training to improve the scope and standard of their skills.

Mr. Grist: The whole-time equivalent of nursing and midwifery staff (excluding auxiliaries) employed by health authorities in Wales is given in the following table. Information on the number undertaking post-basic training courses is not immediately available but I will write to the hon. Gentleman about this as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

District Health Authority	Whole-time equivalent as at 30 September 1987
Clwyd	2,817
East Dyfed	1,598

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what occasions he has met his Department's working party on the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Working Group has met under my chairmanship on 3 occasions since January. My right hon. Friend is fully informed of its deliberations.

Elderly People

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to (a) ensure that health authorities and social service departments were made aware of the fact that, from 11 April, elderly people will no longer have access to private nursing homes until their own homes have been sold and (b) increase funds for community care provision to cater for the increased number of elderly people who need nursing care and have to remain at home.

Mr. Grist: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services earlier today.

Coal Industry

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are at present employed in (a) the north Wales coalfield and (b) the south Wales coalfield; and what are the corresponding figures for 1978, 1968 and 1958.

Mr. Peter Walker: Available data are National Coal Board/British Coal estimates of the numbers on colliery books.

Steel Production

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total crude steel production in Wales in the last year for which full figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1968.

Mr. Peter Walker: Crude steel production figures for Wales from 1968 to 1987 are given in the following table:

Fishing Industry

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the United Kingdom fishing fleet the Welsh fleet represents; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1968.

Mr. Peter Walker: In 1986, fishing vessels over 40 ft in length operating from Wales amounted to 2·7 per cent. of the United Kingdom total. During the period 1968 to 1985 the figure varied between 1·9 per cent. and 3 per cent. of the United Kingdom total. Comprehensive data on vessels under 40 ft are not readily available.

Self-sufficiency

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of self-sufficiency of Wales in each of the following products: (a) fish, (b) mutton and lamb, (c) poultrymeat, (d) beef, (e) oats, (f) cheese, (g) liquid milk, (h) barley, (i) potatoes, (j) pigmeat, (k) eggs, (l) wheat and (m) butter.

Mr. Peter Walker: Estimates of the ratio of production to consumption in 1987 for each of the food products are given in the following table:

		Self sufficiency (production/consumption)
(a)	Fish	not available
(b)	Mutton and Lamb	3·5
(c)	Poultry (chicken only)	3·1
(d)	Beef	3·9
(e)	Oats	not available
(f)	Cheese	1·9
(g)	Liquid milk	3·2
(h)	Barley	not available
(i)	Potatoes	0·7
(j)	Pigmeat	0·4
(k)	Eggs	0·7
(l)	Wheat	not available
(m)	Butter	2·1

Estimates of production are based on figures from the Aggregate Net Income calculation and the Milk Marketing Board. Estimates of consumption are taken from the results of the national food survey, based on a small sample of 120 households in Wales and are therefore subject to some estimation error.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of self-sufficiency of Wales in terms of electricity produced and consumed; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1968.

Mr. Peter Walker: Available data for production and consumption of electricity are shown in the following table:

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total tonnage of (a) overseas export trade and (b) overseas imports trade through Welsh ports during the last year for which full figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1968.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is given in the following table:

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Walker: In 1987-88, my Department spent £22,365·99 on official hospitality.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the change in the number of people employed in (a) manufacturing and (b) the service industries in Wales between 1979 and 1986;

(2) what was the percentage change in the number of people employed in (a) manufacturing and (b) the service industries in Wales between 1979 and 1986.

Mr. Peter Walker: Available data show the following:

Employees in employment

	Change	Per cent. change
Manufacturing	−112,000	−35·5
Services	−16,000	−2·8

Source: Department of Employment Quarterly Series.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the change in the number of employees in employment in Wales between 1979 and 1986.

Mr. Peter Walker: The numbers of employees in employment in Wales at June 1979 and June 1986 were 1,033,000 and 861,000 respectively. This represents a change of 172,000.

Economic Regeneration

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount spent by each district authority in Wales during the last year for which full figures are available on economic regeneration; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 15 April 1988]: It is not possible separately to identify expenditure on economic regeneration, at which a number of different activities of local authorities are wholly or partly aimed.

SCOTLAND

Education Expenditure

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the per capita spending on primary and secondary education in each school board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The table, which has been compiled from local authority financial returns, gives information on current expenditure per pupil in primary and secondary schools in each education authority in 1986-87, the latest year for which information is available.

£s at out-turn prices

Region	Primary	Secondary
Borders	1,091	1,601
Central	961	1,651
Dumfries and Galloway	946	1,713
Fife	1,021	1,706
Grampian	1,021	1,725
Highland	1,033	1,622
Lothian	1,033	1,846
Strathclyde	1,066	1,787
Tayside	988	1,768
Orkney	1,249	2,007
Shetland	1,391	2,503
Western Isles	1,094	2,138

Information about individual schools is not held centrally. The School Boards (Scotland) Bill now before Parliament will establish a separate board for each education authority school; each board will have the right to receive information on expenditure related to the school.

Roads (Improvement)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a programme for trunk road improvements in Scotland to update the report, "Policy for Scottish Roads," last published in 1984.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A further policy document will be issued, but it will need to take account of several forthcoming reports, particularly that on routes south of Edinburgh and the feasibility studies on the upgrading of the A74 to motorway. I hope that publication of the policy document will be possible in the spring of next year.

Rating Reform

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many extra posts will be created in the Scottish courts administration in 1988, 1989, 1990 as a result of the community charge legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The explanatory and financial memorandum to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Bill estimated that up to 40 additional staff will be required. This estimate remains unchanged and additional staff will be deployed to the courts as and when required.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what figures were available to him, when he considered alternative introduction dates for the community charge, concerning the likely average individual charge in 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: Calculations of illustrative personal community charge levels have been made only on the basis of the charges which would have been required to replace actual domestic rate income. No future projections of personal community charge levels — which would be entirely speculative — have been made. My right hon. and learned Friend has always been concerned to secure the benefits of the community charge system for Scotland as soon as possible.

Oil Landings (Shetlands)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid to the Shetlands council as an automatic percentage of oil landed for every year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: That is a matter for the Shetland Islands council. I have no locus.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Rifkind: The amount spent was £41,983.

A96 (Roundabout)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has decided what kind of inquiry there will be as a result of objections to proposals to establish a roundabout at Selattic quarry on the A96 at Inverurie road; when such an inquiry is due to commence; what notice will be given to objectors; and if objectors who have or who have not yet lodged objections will be allowed to propose alternative schemes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am not yet in a position to say whether or when a public inquiry into the proposed line of the Bucksburn diversion will be necessary. This will depend on whether the objections received to the published draft road order can be resolved by negotiation and also on public reaction to the draft compulsory purchase order to be published in the summer.

If an inquiry is held, objectors will receive no less than 28 days notice in writing of the date, time and place. Objectors would have the opportunity to propose alternative schemes at an inquiry.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many objections have been lodged against proposals to establish a roundabout at Selattic quarry on the A96 at Inverurie road.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Twenty.

MV Hebridean Isles

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to what sum of compensation was paid by Cochranes Ltd., of Selby to Caledonian MacBrayne for errors in the design and construction of the MV Hebridean Isles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lilley [holding answer 14 March 1988]: It is not the practice of this or previous Governments to reveal the exposure of the Export Credits Guarantee Department to individual countries. The committee concluded that the portrait satisfied the Waverley criteria and, therefore, recommended a four-month deferral of a decision on the export licence application. Detailed plans for associated exercise activity in the Clyde are not yet finalised, but it is expected that some ships will depart from the Clyde. There will probably be some exercise mine-laying activity in the area, and, as part of the routine planning process, mine-laying areas have been discussed and agreed with representatives of fishermen who work the area. A local area warning message about the exercise mine-laying activity will also be issued well in advance of the exercise, in accordance with our normal procedures.

Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet the management of Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd., to discuss the progress of the inquiries as to (a) why a large section of a new nuclear-powered submarine came to be welded on upside down at the Barrow yard and (b) why sections of a Trident submarine were lost overboard from a Bahamas registered cargo vessel off the Mull of Galloway and Walney Island in February.

Mr. Sainsbury: The amount spent on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88 was £3,111,845. The amount quoted represents total expenditure borne on defence votes for the provision of official entertainment, apart from a small element of expenditure overseas which has yet to be brought to account. The figure includes therefore expenditure incurred not only by the Ministry of Defence itself, but also by formations and establishments of the armed forces at home and overseas, and by individual officers occupying command and international appointments for which entertainment allowances are payable.

Weapons and Ammunition (Transport)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the categories of weapons currently being transported by road from the base at Caerwent.

Mr. Freeman: No. It is not our practice to provide details of weapons or ammunitions stocks at particular sites.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider the safety implications at Royal Air Force Caerwent of changing the transport of ammunition from road to rail.

Mr. Freeman: I am satisfied with the current arrangements for the transport of ammunition to and from RAF Caerwent, which involves movement both by rail and by road.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any propoals to improve the security of the transport of ammunition by contractors employed by the United States Army during collection, parking, and delivery of the loads.

Mr. Freeman: No. These responsibilities fall to the United States authorities who are subject to the same regulations governing the storage and handling of ammunition as Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the interests of safety, he will stipulate that at least two drivers per vehicle are employed in the transport of ammunition from Royal Air Force bases.

Mr. Freeman: In accordance with the provisions of the Conveyance by Road of Military Explosives Regulations 1977, attendants are provided for each driver, or, where there is an organised convoy, in the leading, last and every fifth vehicle.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are made to ensure that drivers of ammunition lorries at the Caerwent base are sober and in a fit condition to drive before their vehicles are loaded at the base, Newport docks or other loading centres.

Mr. Freeman: The authorised explosives representative at the site is responsible for ensuring that ammunition is handled in accordance with the provisions of the Conveyance by Road of Military Explosives Regulations 1977.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if lorries transporting ammunition from the Caerwent base are escorted by military personnel.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Drinking Clubs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review arrangements for the establishment and regulation of drinking clubs on Royal Air Force bases including the admission of civilian personnel.

Mr. Freeman: Bar facilities are limited to the provision of officers' messes, sergeants' messes, junior ranks' clubs and in certain cases civilian canteens. These are well regulated and arrangements are kept under local review. The admission of civilian personnel to service facilities is only by invitation and is subject to strict control of local commanders.

Ammunition (Storage and Handling)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what checks are carried out to ensure that personnel responsible for the storage and handling of ammunition are not working under the influence of alcohol.

Mr. Freeman: The handling of military explosives is strictly regulated. Unit standing orders specify that no person under the influence of alcohol is to be allowed to enter ammunition storage or handling areas. The transportation of military explosives is also strictly regulated (Statutory Instrument 1977 No. 888 — Conveyance by Road of Military Explosives Regulations 1977) and imposes similar restrictions in relation to vehicles.

Benbecula (Visit)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visit of a group of United States military officers to Benbecula on 15 February.

Mr. Freeman: Two United States military officers from HQ 3rd air force transited through Benbecula on 15 February following their visit to a joint RN/RAF exercise in the north atlantic area.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the minimum height at which Royal Air Force aircraft are permitted to fly over land in Cyprus;

(2) what is the minimum height at which Royal Air Force aircraft are permitted to fly over land in Belize;

(3) what is the minimum height at which Royal Air Force aircraft are permitted to fly over land in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: RAF aircraft are stationed in Cyprus, Belize and the Falkland Islands for operational rather than training purposes. It is not our practice to comment on operational details.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the rate of major accidents per 10,000 flying hours, in each year since 1971, for (a) Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft, and (b) all British military fast jet aircraft.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 31 March 1988]: Since 1971, the major accident rates for fast jet aircraft of the Royal Air Force have been as follows:

Fast-Jet Cat. 4/5 Accident Rate Per 10,000 Flying Hours

Year	Rate
1971	2·35

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Green Pound

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the green pound in the light of the intended fiscal harmony within the EEC in 1992.

Mr. MacGregor: The completion of a single Community market for agricultural products by 1992 requires removal of monetary compensatory amounts which are applied in agricultural trade. I have told the Agriculture Council that it would be appropriate to take a measured step in that direction in the context of the 1988 price fixing.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The provisional figure for expenditure in 1987-88 is £44,000.

Milk (Hormones)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to prevent growth hormones being used to boost milk yields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I see no justification for such steps.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the health consequences for milk consumers of additional fat in milk stemming from the use of growth hormones in dairy cattle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I understand that the fat content of milk over a whole lactation from dairy cows treated with bovine somatotropin lies within the range of fat content of milk from untreated dairy cows.

Surplus Food

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responses he has received from organisations which wish to take advantage of the European Community scheme for distributing surplus food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 April 1988]: I shall be making an announcement soon.

Green Pound

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to have achieved a 9 per cent. devaluation of the green pound; what steps he proposes to take to reduce the competitive disadvantages currently suffered by British farmers within the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 15 April 1988] Devaluations of green currencies are generally best made in the context of the annual price fixing, when their effect on consumers and taxpayers, as well as on farmers, can be properly assessed. I have made it clear to the Agriculture Council that some devaluation is justified in the current price-fixing and will be pressing for it. In the pigmeat sector, where MCAs are creating rather than preventing distortions, I am pressing for the abolition of our MCAs, but there are conflicting views within the Council and this will not be easy to achieve.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Stanley: £247,882 was spent by the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments.

School Assemblies

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what direction or regulation the state schools in Northern Ireland have been given the authority to hold, during their assemblies, a public signing of the peace pledge organised by the "Choose Life Campaign"; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 15 April 1988]: No directions have been issued to schools on the matter, nor is it covered by any regulation.

Rallies

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) under what direction or regulation the divisional youth offices of the Northern Ireland education and library boards have been given authority to provide transport to a "Choose Life" rally in the King's hall, Belfast, on 23 April;

(2) what is his policy towards the provision of free transport by education and library boards for attendance at rallies to be addressed by persons who have made public statements accusing the security forces of murder; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 15 April 1988]: The provision of transport in the circumstances described is a matter for decision by individual education and library boards.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Road Accidents

98. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has made any studies of the cost to the National Health Service of transport-related accidents.

Mrs. Currie: No specific study of these costs has been carried out, but the Department does form an estimate of the likely annual cost of treating casualties of road traffic accidents. The latest available estimate (England 1985) puts the cost at £124 million.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people will receive reduced housing benefit or no housing benefit as a result of the changes in social security on 11 April because of (a) the rise in the rent taper from 60 to 65 per cent, (b) the 20 per cent. contribution to rates, (c) the £6,000 capital rule, (d) the changes to non-dependant deductions and (e) other changes, broken down into (i) two-parent families with children, (ii) one-parent families with children, (iii) pensioners, (iv) young single people under 25 years and (iv) others;

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are his latest estimates of the number of households and global sums concerned in the recent changes in social security benefit in respect of (a) the number of households who will be required to pay an additional contribution to rates, (b) the median sum concerned and (c) the global additional national sum for which affected householders will be now liable;

(2) if he will state in respect of the recent and immediately forthcoming changes in social security benefits (a) the number of households who, other than any increased contributions to the rates, will be disadvantaged, (b) the median sum per household and (c) the total national global reduction for those concerned in (a) above.

Mr. Portillo: Answers to these questions in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the latest number of losers as a result of changes in housing benefit in each local authority area in England.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will break down the £650 million to be saved on housing benefit into claimant categories of (i) families with children, (ii) pensioners, (iii) young single people under 25 years and (iv) others; and what proportion of the savings is due to the 20 per cent. contribution to rates in each case.

Mr. Portillo: We estimate that the requirement for ratepayers to pay a minimum of 20 per cent. of domestic rates saves some two thirds of the total housing benefit saving of £650 million. It is not possible to break these figures down by claimant categories.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of raising the level of savings under which housing benefit is payable to £10,000 on the assumption that (a) the rules for other benefits are unaltered, (b) the interest actually received on savings and not an arbitrarily assumed return is used in assessing benefit and (c) no change is made to the rule that those with savings of under £3,000 receive benefit in full.

Mr. Portillo: Of the order of £60 million.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of those receiving housing benefit in each of the last three years had (a) no savings, (b) savings of under £3,000, (c) savings of £3,000 and under £6,000, (d) savings of £6,000 and under £10,000 and (e) savings of over £10,000.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that we hold no data on the capital holdings of those who have received housing benefit over the last three years. Government estimates of the effects of the new capital rule are based on extrapolations from the family expenditure survey.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has now received the reports of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council investigations into the possible extension of bronchitis and emphysema as industrial diseases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to have the report from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council dealing with the prescription of chronic bronchitis and emphysema as an industrial disease; and whether he intends to ensure it is published without delay.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle) and the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) on 14 March 1988 at column 472.

Nurses

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how his Department calculates the number of nurses registered with the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting who are not currently practising nursing, and who are to be targeted in the campaign to recruit and retain nurses launched on Thursday 24 March.

Mr. Newton: An analysis has been carried out of the live register of United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (UKCC), concentrating particularly on those nurses, midwives and health visitors who have confirmed or updated their registration details, but not paid the new periodic fee. The rationale for concentrating on this group is that, while their non-payment of the fee implies that they are not working in nursing, their desire to maintain a correct record of their registration particulars suggests the possibility of their availability for nursing work at a later date or if work become available to suit their personal circumstances. The UKCC estimates there will be a United Kingdom total of 85,000 people in this category once the periodic fee exercise is complete. The UKCC has advised district health authorities of the service it is able to provide in forwarding recruitment literature to this group of people.

Oldham Home-making Scheme

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from Oldham metropolitan borough concerning the Oldham home-making scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have received representations about the delay in RHA funding for this scheme. It was one of a number considered by the RHA against its target of resettling a record level of 150 patients in the community in 1988-89. I understand that three schemes for Salford, Bolton and Manchester have been given priority for this year with other schemes including the Oldham home-making scheme remaining under consideration for funding in subsequent years.

Age Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value in 1971 money of the 25p age allowance for those aged over 80 years, which was introduced in 1971.

Mr. Scott: At 1971 prices, the 25p age addition is currently worth five pence.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to (a) ensure that health authorities and social services departments were made aware of the fact that from 11 April elderly people will no longer have access to private nursing homes until their own homes have been sold; and (b) increase funds for community care provision to cater for the increased number of elderly people who need nursing care and have to remain at home.

Mr. Portillo: It is not necessary for a person to sell his home before entering private care. However, when he takes up permanent residence in a residential care home or nursing home he will not be entitled to income support if the net value of his former home together with any other capital goods he has exceeds £6,000. The value of the previous home will be disregarded in certain circumstances including if it is occupied by the person's partner.

The need for additional community services should not arise and there was no need to consult social services or health authorities.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the major clearing banks regarding the availability of loans for persons needing immediate access to capital locked up in their home for use to pay nursing home fees, in the light of the withdrawal under the new social security regulations of loans from his Department for this purpose.

Mr. Portillo: We have written to all the major clearing banks. They have assured us that loans will be made available in these circumstances, subject to the normal conditions.

Local Offices (Partitions)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost of strengthening partitions in public sections in his Department's offices in Bradford south and west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Work to strengthen partitions has been carried out only at Bradford, south local office and this cost £309·75.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost of strengthening partitions in public sections of his Department's offices in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

There has been no change in the Department's policy with regard to the level of protection provided for staff. Local office managers have responsibility for deciding the appropriate level of protection, in consultation with their local staff and trade unions.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Moore: Estimated expenditure on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88 is £86,250. In addition, the Department spent £56,235 in its role as host to the world summit on AIDS.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of people on supplementary benefit broken down into (i) claimants, (ii) dependants, (iii) children and (iv) families with children.

Mr. Portillo: In February 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the position was as follows:

	Number
Claimants	4,938,000
Partners	1,127,000
Children under 16 years	2,123,000
Other dependants	104,000
Families with children under 16 years	1,137,000

Industrial Death Benefit

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services for what reasons he has decided to withdraw future payments to widows in respect of industrial death benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of industrial death benefit from widows to whom it was awarded before April 1988, in the light of his Department's social security notes of February 1988, which stated that in existing cases payment would continue.

Mr. Scott: Industrial death benefit has been abolished in respect of deaths occurring on or after 11 April 1988. In these cases, industrial widows will have access to the same weekly benefits as national insurance widows, including the tax-free lump sum of £1,000, where appropriate, but they will not have to satisfy the contribution conditions. Where an industrial death occurred before 11 April 1988, industrial death benefit will still be payable, though its higher weekly rate has been aligned with that of national insurance widows' pension. This has entailed removal of the industrial preference of 55p a week. However, people in receipt of industrial death benefit will retain the important right to receive other benefits based on their own contributions (for example, retirement pension) on top of their death benefit. The reasons for these changes were set out in a consultation paper on the industrial injuries scheme, issued by the Department in December 1985, and were based on the proposals contained in the 1981 White Paper "Reform of the Industrial Injuries Scheme" Cmnd. 8402.

National Insurance

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount collected from

(a) employers and (b) employees in national insurance contributions in the last financial year; and what amount from these contributions went into the National Health Service funds.

Mr. Portillo: The information is as follows:

Estimated receipts[1] from Class 1 National Insurance Contributions in 1987-88 (Great Britain)

£ million

	Estimated receipts	Allocated to National Health Service
(a) Employers	[2]13,700	1,250
(b) Employees	12,600	1,350

[1] Provisional estimated outturn.
[2] Net of Statutory Sick Pay and Statutory Maternity Pay deductions of £950 million.

Social Fund

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what local contingency arrangements have been made in the Port Talbot and Neath local offices of his Department in the event of the office's social fund budgets being exhausted before the end of the 1988-89 financial year.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 4 March at column 746.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the 1988-89 social fund budget for his Department's offices serving the London borough of Barnet.

Mr. Scott: The local offices serving the London borough of Barnet are Barnet, Edgware, Hendon, Highgate, Neasden and Wood Green. Information on their social fund allocations for 1988-89 was contained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-81.

Pensioner Households (Expenditure)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what surveys have been undertaken to discover the extent to which pensioner households have different expenditure patterns from those of other households.

Mr. Scott: The annual family expenditure survey measures the income and expenditure patterns of a nationally representative sample of households, and the results, which are published, are broken down between pensioner and non-pensioner households.

Social Security Upratings

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy to use the all-items retail prices index to uprate income support at future social security upratings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We will announce our decisions concerning the uprating of income support at the time of the general uprating statement in the autumn.

Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the real increase in expenditure in social security between 1978-79 and 1987-88 broken down into the main reasons for the increase on the same basis as contained in the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90", volume II, 3.15, paragraph 39.

Mr. Scott: Over the period 1978-79 to 1987-88 the social security programme increased by £13 billion (at 1987-88 prices) or by 39 per cent. in real terms. The main reasons for the increase were:

(i) £4 billion due to real increases in the average amounts of benefit paid (whether due to changes in the basic rates of benefit or other factors)
(ii) £3·75 billion due to increased numbers of unemployed people receiving benefits
(iii) £2·5 billion due to increased numbers of retirement pensioners
(iv) £2·25 billion due to increased numbers receiving disability benefits
(v) £1·5 billion due to increased numbers of single parents receiving benefits
(vi) £0·75 billion reflecting the increased costs of administering a larger number of claims for benefits offset by reductions of:

(vii) £1 billion reflecting the introduction of statutory sick pay and a decrease in the incidence of short term sickness.
(viii) £0·75 billion from reductions in the numbers of widows and children and in the numbers of women receiving maternity benefits.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current numbers of people waiting for (i) urgent and (ii) non-urgent operations in each specialty in the Leicestershire district health authority.

Mr. Newton: The latest available information is given in the table. The September 1987 waiting list figures are being compiled and will be published as soon as possible. Following the recommendations of the steering group on the health services information, the classification of cases as urgent or non-urgent has been dropped, and much more detailed information about waiting times will be available.

Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the proportion up to 10 per cent. of National Health Service salaries earned by consultants from private practice.

Mr. Newton: This information is not collected centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects his Department to publish Dr. Joe Smith's report on monitoring HIV infection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: As I said in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 9 February at column 168, we propose to publish this report. I cannot yet give a precise date, but expect it to be fairly shortly.

Yorkshire RHAs

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the financial position at the end of the first half of the current budgetary year of each of the 17 Yorkshire regional health authority districts, together with the four districts in South Yorkshire covered by the Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: Both the initial allocation of funds and the release of funds to DHAs during the year are the responsibility of the regional health authority concerned. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairmen of the Yorkshire and Trent RHAs for details of the allocations for 1988-89. At the same time, she may wish to discuss arrangements for receiving details regarding districts mid year financial positions when they become available.

Disregard Threshold

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of raising the disregard threshold for social security benefits from £6,000 to £10,000.

Mr. Portillo: £70 million, assuming that the tariff income begins at £3,000.

Doctors' Pay

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on doctors' pay.

Mr. Newton: The hon. Member must await the publication of the report of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration.

Adjudication Officers' Guide

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the adjudication officers' guide will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 31 March 1988, c. 661-62]: In addition to the adjudication officer's guide, the third annual report of the Chief Adjudication Officer is being published today and copies have been placed in the Library. It provides information on the standards of social security adjudication. I thank the CAO for his detailed report and I welcome the recognition that the new income support scheme and other aspects of the reform of social security should lead to an improvement in adjudication standards.

National Health Service Building Programme

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the National Health Service capital expenditure projects, costing more than £1 million, which have been completed in the Staffordshire, Moorlands parliamentary constituency during the past 14 years and those projected in the next five years.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 12 April 1988, c. 81]: I am sorry that my earlier reply was incomplete.

The information requested is as follows:

Completed schemes:

New Cheadle geriatric unit—completed July 1987—cost £5 million.

Projected schemes:

Leek Moorlands hospital redevelopment — estimated completion date 1989—cost £2·079 million.

Biddulph Neighbourhood hospital — estimated completion date 1993—cost £1·65 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Jamaica and Windward Islands

97. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received about bilateral trade agreements with Jamaica and the Windward Islands.

Mr. Maude: None.

Space

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what progress has been made in identifying a new director general for the British National Space Centre; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the Government's policy on the RADARSAT and Columbus space station projects; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to review the position of British participation in European space ventures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have considered carefully the options for the Columbus polar platform and RADARSAT earth observation projects. I am pleased to announce that we shall be proposing today to our European Space Agency partners that the United Kingdom should take a leading role in the polar platform. This represents a sensible next step, based on our consistent policy of supporting earth observation, where a commercial market can be developed through the acquisition and processing of data for sale to end users. We joined the ERS-1 project under ESA in March 1982; ERS-1 is due to be launched in 1990. I announced on 10 February 1988, at column 250, our decision to establish a new Earth observation data centre at Farnborough costing an additional £20 million. We are now set to proceed with our next major project, the polar platform, at a cost, including the associated instrumentation, of over £250 million during the next 10 years.

I am also pleased to announce that industry will be contributing up to £5 million of the cost of the polar platform. This demonstrates in the clearest possible way British industry's support for our decision and its confidence in the longer-term commercial prospects.

Having decided to enter Columbus, the Government will not be entering the Canadian RADARSAT project. RADARSAT is a good project and we have spent £4·5 million examining it carefully, but it is essentially a one-off project on a smaller scale than Columbus and we would not have offered as good a base for commercial exploitation. To pursue both Columbus and RADARSAT would involve expensive parallel development of different platforms. We expect to receive most of the information RADARSAT would provide through our membership of ERS-1 and Columbus.

Over the last 10 months, we have been urged to enter a wide range of space projects which would have cost the taxpayer well over £1 billion in total. I believe that I have now made a sensible choice to join those projects which offer the best value for money for the British taxpayer and British industry. We have also appointed a new director general for the British National Space Centre. He is Mr. Arthur Pryor, a senior official in my Department. One of his main tasks will be to work closely with industry in order to maximise returns from our new investment in the polar platform.

Tyneside City Action Team

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the annual expenditure of the Tyneside city action team for 1985-86, 1986-87 the half year to October 1987, indicating the amounts which have been spent on (a) research and development, (b) enterprise agencies, (c) advice and consultancy to small businesses, (d) grants to service and (e) grants to manufacturing industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The city action team based in Newcastle comprises the regional directors of my Department, the Department of Employment and Department of the Environment. Expenditure by the three Departments in the area of CAT for the period requested by the hon. Member was:

Year	Amount £

April to October 1987	84,728,000

Expenditure in the categories requested was as follows:

£000s

	1985-86	1986-87	April-October 1987

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what liaison arrangements he has established between the Northern industrial development advisory board, the Tyneside city action team and the Tyne and Wear urban development corporation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The main task of the North Eastern industrial development advisory board is to advise on applications for regional selective assistance under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and on industrial opportunities in the region. The regional director attends the board and is also a member of the city action team. The city action team also works closely with the Tyne and Wear urban development corporation through a system of regular meetings.

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to ensure that United Nations Security Council resolution 558 is being respected within Britain.

Mr. Maude: We implement fully the terms of the voluntary United Nations Council Resolution 558 of 1984.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the advertisement of South African-manufactured arms in British publications.

Mr. Butcher: The Government are not aware of such advertisements. However, we operate a strict and rigorously controlled embargo on the import of arms, ammunition, military vehicles and paramilitary equipment from South Africa.

Engagements

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his official engagements in the County Palatine since he assumed office as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Inner cities visit: Opening new premises at Plastics (Manchester) Limited in Levenshulme. Mr. Clarke has also agreed to open Hoskyn Group Plc's new premises in Sale. Again, opportunities for other Manchester/Salford inner city or regional engagements to be added, as the Minister wishes.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the amounts of regional development grants in Lancashire in each year since 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not possible to provide figures in respect of the "old" regional development grant scheme because information was not maintained by individual areas.

The following regional development grants have been offered to businesses in the west Lancashire district, which is the area in Lancashire with development area status and eligible for regional development grant:

1984-85	12,000
1985-86	1,405,422
1986-87	2,742,827
1987-88	7,150,822

Burton Group

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) when he estimates his Department will complete the section 447 investigation into the Burton Group; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has considered ordering a section 432 investigation into the Burton Group's takeover of Debenham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Inquiries under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985 into Burtons are in progress, as the company has itself stated. Beyond that I cannot comment.

Takeovers

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has considered ordering a section 432 investigation into the Guinness Group takeover of Bells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The inspectors appointed on 28 November 1986 to investigate the affairs and membership of Guinness may inquire into this matter to the extent that they consider necessary.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will institute an inquiry into whether any two or more of (a) the following persons, Roger Seelig, Anthony Parnes, Lord Spens, David Mayhew, Gerald Ronson and Sir Jack Lyons and (b) the companies Morgan Grenfell or Cazenove have been involved jointly in any takeover other than Guinness's takeover of Distillers within the past five years.

Mr. Maude: No.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what his Department intends to spend on promoting the enterprise initiative in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Expenditure by my Department on promoting the enterprise initiative during 1987-88 totalled £6·8 million.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

7. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss British Rail's investment proposals under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

Mr. David Mitchell: Not at this stage. BR is not required to publish its section 40 plan until the end of 1989. It intends to use the time to consult widely with interested parties in the regions.

Accident Statistics

15. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were injured on the roads in 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Too many.

The number of casualties in 1987 is provisionally estimated at 308,000. This is the lowest number recorded in any year since 1958. Motor traffic has increased by 380 per cent. since 1958. The provisional estimate of the number of deaths, at 5,110, is the lowest since 1954. The number of pedestrians killed is the lowest since records began in 1926.

A full breakdown of the provisional estimates is given in statistical bulletin No. [88]10 which is available in the Library.

Metropolitan Counties

16. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with bus operators in metropolitan county areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: I met a delegation of public transport company managing directors from the metropolitan areas on 22 September 1987. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, also met representatives of the Bus and Coach Council on 22 February of this year. From time to time I meet various operators to keep myself informed as the benefits of deregulation unfold.

30. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what change there has been in the number of passengers using bus services in the metropolitan counties following bus deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: In 1986-87, the latest date for which figures are available, bus patronage in the metropolitan areas outside London declined by 12 per cent. over the previous year.

Air Traffic Control

17. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the ability of United Kingdom air traffic control to handle the volume of traffic expected during the summer months.

Mr. Channon: The Civil Aviation Authority tells me that the national air traffic services will be able to handle the traffic expected this summer, subject to peak hour flow management.

DEFECTIVE PRINTING

Railways (Overcrowding)

18. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which rail lines are currently subject to particular overcrowding.

55. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which rail lines are currently subject to particular overcrowding.

Mr. David Mitchell I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) on 29 March at column 455.

35. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish all information he has on overcrowding on trains.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have asked the board to set out, in its annual report and accounts, progress towards achievement of its quality of service objectives which, for network South East, include load factor standards.

42. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed with the chairman of British Rail the problem of overcrowding on trains; and if he will make a statement.

49. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed with the chairman of British Rail the problem of overcrowding on trains; and if he will make a statement.

57. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed with the chairman of British Rail the problem of overcrowding on trains; and if he will make a statement.

66. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed with the chairman of British Rail the problem of overcrowding on trains; and if he will make a statement.

72. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask the chairman of British Rail to meet him to discuss overcrowding on trains.

Mr. David Mitchell: I meet the chairman regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest including, from time to time, quality of service.

Road Transport (Driving Hours)

19. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the proposed European Economic Community regulation to amend the permitted driving hours in road transport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We still await a formal proposal from the European Commission to amend the drivers' hours regulations.

Transport Safety

20. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to increase his enforcement powers in relation to transport safety.

21. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to increase his powers to enforce safety standards on foreign companies operating within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: The safe movement of people and goods is one of my top priorities irrespective of whether the operator is British or foreign. Effective enforcement of safety standards is an essential and regular part of that. I keep my powers for this purpose under regular review but have no immediate plans to seek to increase them.

34. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to provide funding specifically for improvements in transport safety.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport safety is one of our main priorities. A large part of the resources the Department provides are directed to maintaining and improving it.

64. Ms. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that safety should be a higher priority than financial cost in making regulations concerning transport policy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The main reasons why we make transport regulations are to ensure safety and provide environmental protection. When drawing up regulations, we also take account of convenience and the efficient use of resources.

British Rail

22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of British Rail on 28 March. A variety of railway matters were discussed.

Road Accidents

23. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths have occurred in transport related incidents in the United Kingdom in the past year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of deaths in transport accidents in Great Britain during the period July 1986 to June 1987, the most recently available 12 months, was 5,860.

These statistics are obtained from death registration data and include all transport-related accidental deaths.

Approximately 95 per cent. of these accidents are accounted for by road accidents. The remaining accidents are accounted for by rail, sea and air accidents.

Departmental Staff (Safety Matters)

24. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to increase staffing levels for safety-related matters within his Department.

38. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of all staff in his Department are employed to improve safety standards in transport.

56. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff in his Department are employed solely to enforce or improve safety standards in transport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Fostering and improving transport safety is one of the objectives of the Department and is of concern to all staff. Some groups with particular responsibilities for supervision and enforcement are:

	Number
Railways inspectorate	37
Surveyor generals organisation	407
HM Coastguard	569
Driver testing and training	1,715
Road safety policy and vehicle standards and engineering	92
Vehicle inspectorate	1,550
Vehicle components approval	70
Air accidents investigation branch	41

Many of the 628 staff at the Transport and Road Research Laboratory are directly engaged on safety improvement research, and a major part of the work of the 5,401 staff at DVLC is concerned with documentation required for road safety purposes.

Road Haulage Cabotage

25. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed road haulage cabotage with other EEC Transport Ministers.

Mr. Channon: On 16 December last year, at the Transport Council in Brussels.

National Bus Company

26. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many former constituent businesses of the National Bus Company have been bought by their management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Some 40 of the National Bus Company's 70 privatised subsidiaries were bought by management or employee teams. This excellent figure reflects our policy of spreading wealth in the community instead of concentrating it in the hands of the state.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, in chronological order with sale dates, each of the National Bus Company subsidiaries sold to date, stating in each case the individual or company to whom the company was sold, and whether the sale was to a management buy-out, staff buy-out or outside bidder.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is as follows:

In view of the number of people involved in these purchases it would not be practicable to list them individually. If the hon. Gentleman would like details of particular sales perhaps he would write to me.

It should be noted that a number of management and third party sales included provision for equity participation by employees generally.

Airline Competition

27. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the future of airline competition policy in the United Kingdom and in the European Community.

Mr. Channon: I have received many representations from airlines and other interests, the majority supporting competition in the provision of air transport services.

65. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to the implications for airline competition of the recent statement by the European Commissioner for Transport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend welcomes the agreement reached between the European Commission and British Airways, following the merger with British Caledonian Airways. The agreement is compatible with BA's proposals accepted by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, which opened up major opportunities for other United Kingdom airlines to operate services on domestic and European routes.

The Government remain committed to their policy, set out in the 1984 White Paper, of encouraging a sound competitive multi-airline industry, promoting competition in all markets, and ensuring adequate safeguards against anti-competitive behaviour.

Nationalised Industries (Safety)

28. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to seek to extend his powers to enforce safety improvements on nationalised industries.

Mr. Channon: None at present, but I shall be studying carefully any recommendations made by the investigation into the King's Cross fire on the monitoring and enforcement of safety provisions.

Road Safety

29. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on current standards of road safety.

Mr. Bottomley: We are making good progress. Despite a 5 per cent. increase in traffic, last year road accident deaths were down 5 per cent., seriously injured down 8 per cent. and child pedestrian casualties down 9 per cent.

Most road accident indicators show a decline over the last 20 years when related to the growth in traffic. We have the best road safety record in the European Community and one of the best in the world. That is no cause for complacency.

In publishing last July the report of the inter-departmental review of road safety we set the objective of accelerating the reduction in road accident casualties so as to reduce the number by one third—from 300,000 per year to 200,000—by the year 2000.

Motorways

31. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further proposals he has for motorway road construction and repairs to existing motorways.

Mr. Channon: We are continuing to develop and improve the motorway network. Seven schemes are currently under construction and a further 26 are in preparation with a total value of over £1 billion.

There is a continuing programme of major structural maintenance. In 1988-89 we expect to renew some 80 miles of existing motorway.

Network SouthEast

33. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss passenger safety on Network SouthEast.

Mr. David Mitchell: I meet the chairman regularly to discuss various matters of mutual interest. At our last meeting the chairman briefed me on the recent tragic incident on the Orpington-Victoria line and on the measures that British Rail is considering in the light of that.

Passenger Transport Authorities'

36. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairmen of the passenger transport authorities; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend saw chairmen of the passenger transport authorities on 13 July 1987 to discuss precept control. Since then, I have seen the chairmen of some of the authorities to discuss their individual expenditure levels and precept limits; the chairman of the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority also led a delegation of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities which called on me on 2 March to make representations about the proposed change of the passenger transport authorities from precepting to billing authorities.

Manchester Airport

37. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to visit Manchester airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans for a visit.

Motorways (Speed Limits)

39. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of motorway traffic he estimates exceeds the mandatory speed limit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A national speed survey was carried out in 1987 and the results were published in January. This showed:

	Percentage exceeding limit
	1987	1983
(a) Vehicle subject to 70 mph
Cars	36	40
Two-wheeled motor vehicles	50	47
Buses and coaches	9	31
Vans	22	19
Minibuses	12	22
(b) Vehicles subject to 60 mph
HGVs—Rigid	21	30
HGVs—Articulated	22	50
(c) Vehicles subject to 50 mph when survey taken in 1983, now 60 mph
Car towing	7	64

Although the proportion exceeding the 70 mph limit on motorways has fallen, there has regrettably been no decrease in the proportion exceeding 75 mph.

London Underground

40. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department last made a study of the threat to passenger safety caused by the danger of fires on the London Underground.

Mr. David Mitchell: Fire is one of the risks to passenger safety that is monitored by the Department's Railway Inspectorate. Specific studies of this risk were made in connection with the inspectorate's formal inquiries into the underground fires at Finsbury Park (1976), Goodge Street (1981) and Bounds Green (1982). Published reports are available on these inquiries. Following the fire at Oxford Circus in 1984, London Underground Limited and the London fire brigade carried out a joint inquiry. The inspectorate has monitored the implementation of the inquiries' recommendations, which address wider issues of fire safety generally on the underground. The inspectorate also studies the reports of the annual fire prevention inspections carried out by the London fire brigade. Where new work is concerned, such as the Heathrow extension, the inspectorate requires an assurance that the fire authority is satisfied as to fire precautions before the works are opened to the public.

54. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on safety standards on the London Underground.

Mr. David Mitchell: Safety standards on the London underground are primarily the responsibility of London Regional Transport. LRT and London Underground Ltd. have a statutory duty to observe the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act and, where applicable, they are also required to observe my Department's published railway construction and operation requirements. The chief inspecting officer of railways provides an annual commentary on the underground's safety record in his reports on railway safety in Great Britain, copies of which are in the Library. The record has been generally satisfactory. It would be wrong for me to make any comments on matters that are currently under investigation as a result of the King's Cross fire.

74. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss the performance of London Underground Limited.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of London Regional Transport from time to time as and when the need arises.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the reduction in numbers and percentage of employees of London Underground Ltd. in the regional and telecommunications departments since 1984; what authorisations he has given to such reductions; and if any reference to such changes has been made by Her Majesty's inspectors of railways.

Mr. David Mitchell: Staffing both in aggregate and in particular departments is a matter for the boards of London Regional Transport and London Underground Ltd. The Department has no information about staffing levels in the areas referred to. Changes in those levels would not need to be referred to the Department in general or the railways inspectorate in particular.

Central London

41. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for controlling the amount of traffic entering central London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans for direct control of the amount of traffic entering central London.

Concessionary Bus Fares

43. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now seek to introduce a national concessionary bus fare scheme for pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. It is for local authorities to decide what arrangements to make for concessionary travel in their areas, and how to help elderly people most effectively within the resources available to them.

Air Traffic (Delays)

44. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he will take to reduce delays for air travellers flying from London's airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on Monday 28 March at column 355. The Government seek to discharge their functions at the London airports with the same efficiency as at other airports.

Vehicle Seat Belts

45. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of the safety implications of the greater use of vehicle seat belts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Rear-seat passengers are seven times more likely than front-seat occupants to be ejected from vehicles in crashes because they are less likely to be wearing restraints. Wearing a seat belt undoubtedly cuts deaths and injury.

The Department's monitoring exercise of the effects of the 1983 introduction of compulsory wearing of seat belts and an independent assessment in 1985 by Professors Durbin and Harvey both identified at least 200 fewer deaths and 7,000 fewer serious injuries per year among front-seat occupants of cars and light vans.

All cars first registered from 1 April 1987 must also be fitted with rear-seat belts. From next October vulnerable seats in new coaches will have to be equipped similarly. Everyone is well advised to use them.

Departmental Expenditure (Safety Matters)

46. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of all spending by his Department is used for safety improvements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A key objective for the Department is to promote and improve safety across the transport modes. Safety-related expenditure is incurred, for example, on constructing and improving roads, on investigation of road, rail, sea and air accidents, on licensing drivers of private vehicles, buses and lorries, on inspecting vehicles of all types and approving vehicle components and systems, on regulating the bus, lorry and shipping industries and the carriage of hazardous substances, on the coast guard, on research and on publicity.

It is not practicable to specify the proportion of all spending by the Department which is used for safety improvements. Direct expenditure on safety is bound up with expenditure incurred for other reasons (for example, in the case of road construction), and safety-related expenditure varies widely in character, from physical measures such as road improvements, to research projects, to administrative costs and overheads associated with regulation, licensing, inspection and enforcement.

Manchester Airport

47. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he plans to meet the chairman of British Airways to discuss the future development plans for Manchester airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Airways from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

British Caledonian Routes

48. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding competition on air routes previously operated by British Caledonian.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received numerous letters on the subject. Applications from British Airlines for licences for routes previously served by British Caledonian will be considered by the Civil Aviation Authority over the next few months.

Coaches (Speed Limiters)

50. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when new coaches will be subject to speed limiters.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The regulations will apply to coaches as shown in the following table:

Date of first use	Date from which regulation applies
1 April 1974 to 31 March 1984	1 April 1991
1 April 1984 to 31 March 1989	1 April 1990
On or after 1 April 1989	Date of first use

Roads Budget

51. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the national roads budget was last reduced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The national roads budget was last reduced, by £14·9 million, in the financial year 1983-84 from £738 million to £723 million. During that year, public expenditure was running ahead of planning totals and a Cabinet decision was taken to cut cash limits on all votes.

1983-84 was an exception to the steady, upward trend of provision for national roads which has resulted in real terms growth of about 30 per cent. between 1978-79 and 1987-88.

Since 1979 provision for national roads has been steadily rising as follows:

National roads public expenditure provision

£ million

Year	Cash	Real terms (at 1986-87 prices)
1978-79	377	733
1979-80	443	738
1980-81	536	754
1981-82	685	878
1982-83	739	883
1983-84	723	826
1984-85	795	869
1985-86	816	841
1986-87	893	893
1987-88	976	936

Road Accidents (Summer Time Changes)

52. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates are available to him of the predicted number of fatal and other serious road accidents which would be avoided by a changeover to British standard time or a combination of British standard time and double British summer time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A TRRL study published in 1986 estimated, with a number of caveats, that the potential accident benefits of re-introducing British standard time — as during the 1968 to 1971 experimental period — might be as follows:

Estimated changes in national casualties during the winter

	Pedestrians		Others (under 25)		Others (over 25)		All road users
	KSI	Total	KSI	Total	KSI	Total	KSI	Total
Per cent. reduction	3·6	2·2	1·5	0·7	1·0	0·8	1·9	1·1
Casualty reduction	300	590	180	350	100	400	580	1,340

No estimates are available on potential accident benefits from a combination of British standard time and double British summer time.

32. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has made any studies of the cost to the economy of transport-related accidents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport publishes annual estimates of the cost of road accidents. The total cost of road accidents in Great Britain in 1986, the latest available date, was estimated to be £3·8 billion, of which £2·8 billion is due to accidents involving personal injury. The cost of road accidents divided up for different severities of injury is as follows:

Injury	Estimated cost £
Fatal Accidents	1·5 billion (39 per cent.)
Serious accidents	1·1 billion (28 per cent.)
Slight accidents	0·3 billion (8 per cent.)
Damage only accidents	1·0 billion (25 per cent.)

Included in the cost of personal injury accidents are estimates of the loss of output due to death or injury (30 per cent.), medical and ambulance costs (5 per cent.), the cost of police and insurance administration (2 per cent.), property damage (11 per cent.) and an allowance for pain, grief and suffering (52 per cent.).

The Department does not assess routinely the cost of accidents on railways, in shipping or aviation.

Western Environmental Improvement Route Project

53. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for public consultation on the western environmental improvement route project; and when any public consultation will be carried out.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope it will be possible to seek the public's views on the Department's proposals for the western environmental improvement route towards the end of this year.

Eurotunnel

58. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of Eurotunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: I last met the chairman on 15 February.

Trunk Roads

59. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of trunk road schemes planned to start between April 1987 and March 1989 have had their commencement delayed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Of the schemes listed in the 1987 White Paper "Policy for Roads in England: 1987" (Cm 125), for a start of works by March 1989, just under one-third are not now expected to achieve this. These schemes have slipped for a variety of reasons, principally delay in the statutory procedures and technical and design problems.

Highways (Agency Arrangements)

60. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the interim report of the Audit Commission into improving highways agency arrangements between counties and districts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is considering the report and discussing its implementation with the local authority associations. We welcome the emphasis on securing more businesslike agency arrangements, and look to authorities to review their arrangements in the light of the report.

Heathrow Airport (Underground Travel)

61. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last made an official journey by underground train to Heathrow airport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have made any recent official journeys on the underground although we have both made unofficial journeys recently.

Settle-Carlisle Line

62. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has held with local authorities regarding the Settle-Carlisle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: Last Wednesday, I received the terms of the local authorities' revised offer of support for the line. I am studying that, and especially the conditions they have attached to their offer.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the main implications for his Department of the feasibility study carried out by John Jarvis and Sons plc of the Settle-Carlisle railway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The report by J. Jarvis and Sons described the potential development of tourist projects in the Settle-Carlisle corridor, rather than the future of that railway itself. The tourist potential of the area is one of the aspects I am taking into account in considering the future of the line.

Consultants

63. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many private consultants his Department has employed during the last year on studies of safety standards in transport provision.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the calendar year 1987, the Department used nearly 50 different private consultants, industrial companies or associations on just over 70 studies concerned with safety standards in transport provision.

Litter

67. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed with the chairman of British Rail his plans to remove litter and rubbish from the tracks at British Rail stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: These are operational matters for British Rail and we have not discussed them with the chairman.

Road Projects (Transport Supplementary Grant)

68. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why road projects with a negative net present value can qualify for transport supplementary grant.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In assessing the merits of schemes for transport supplementary grant, we take into account the extent to which they provide value for money in terms of benefits to traffic, to the community, to industry and commerce, and improvements in road safety and the environment. In certain cases, a scheme with a negative net present value may provide significant benefits which cannot be reflected in the calculation.

ScotRail

69. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the management of ScotRail to discuss rail investment.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend discusses such matters when appropriate with the chairman of the British Railways Board; it would not be appropriate to hold separate discussions with regional managements.

Light Rail Systems

70. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in developing light rail systems.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Tyne and Wear Metro and the London docklands light railway are both in operation. Studies of further light rail proposals for London are under way and a number of authorities are proposing such systems elsewhere.

London Airports (Runway Capacity)

71. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a review of the adequacy of runway capacity at London airports in the 1990s.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our 1985 White Paper "Airports Policy" (Cmnd. 9542) set out the pattern of development of airport capacity, including runway capacity, to meet London area demand into the mid-1990s. The first step in any further work is the preparation of up to date forecasts of air travel demand. The Department is preparing such forecasts, which it expects to publish towards the end of this year.

Tyneside Metro

73. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to extend the Tyneside Metro to Sunderland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the Tyne and Wear passenger transport authority and executive are considering the possibility of extending the Tyneside Metro to Sunderland, but no proposals have yet been put to my Department.

Vehicle Registration

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take on the main conclusions of the report of the consultative group on the vehicle registration system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 3 February 1988 at column 622.

Foreign Cars (Safety)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review safety and legal problems associated with the import of foreign cars for sale which do not carry spare wheels of the same design as those fitted to the vehicle.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Regulations permit the use of spare wheels of different design on a temporary-use basis up to a maximum speed of 50 mph. We are not aware of safety or legal problems.

Traffic (Haringey)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the increase in the volume of traffic by vehicle type since 1979 in the borough of Haringey.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of changes in traffic volume since 1979 are not available at a borough level.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department spent £84,789 in 1987-88 on the full range of official hospitality.

Ammunition (Transport by Road)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will introduce regulations to apply stricter controls to prevent drivers employed in the transport of ammunition by road driving under the influence of alcohol; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will review precautions for dealing with fire explosion, collision or other accidents involving ammunition in transit by road; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he will review the regulations for the transport of projectile ammunition by road; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether he will review the regulations for the transport of explosive ammunition by road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Later this summer we expect to make the Road Traffic (Carriage of Explosives) Regulations, which will provide up-to-date and co-ordinated controls covering all aspects of the carriage of explosives by road including the transport of ammunition. They will deal with such matters as the marking of vehicles, training and instruction, and the procedures to follow in the event of an accident. They will reaffirm the existing prohibition on people under the influence of alcohol being in or in attendance on a vehicle carrying explosives.

Transport in London (Attacks)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many attacks there have been on (a) members of the public where transport staff have been involved in assisting those attacked and (b) members of the public unassisted by staff on (i) London buses, (ii) London Underground and (iii) British Rail in the London area in the last 12 months; what were the comparable figures five and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: This information is not available.

Road Programme

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to add any further schemes to the road programme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The last major review of our road programme, which we announced last April, added 82 new schemes to it. On 7 March, as part of the Government's inner cities initiative, we announced further schemes with an estimated construction cost of £109 million. We have now decided to add seven more schemes, expected to cost about £41 million, as follows:

Schemes added to the road programme

	Region	Estimated works cost £ million
All-purpose trunk roads
1. A11 Roudham Heath to Attleborough Improvement	ERO	9·9
2. A12 Lowestoft Second Harbour Crossing	ERO	10·4
3. A31 Ashley Heath to Ringwood Improvement	SWRO	2·5
4. A46 Pennsylvania to M4 Tormarton Improvement	SWRO	4·0
5. A6 Rothwell and Desborough Bypass	EMRO	5·1
6. A23 Wadden Marsh Bridge	LRO	[1]4·0
Motorway
7. M— Blackburn Southern Bypass: Extension to Bamber Bridge Bypass[2]	NWRO	5·0

Note:
[1] Including private sector contribution of £3 million.
[2] Motorway number to be decided.

Bus Services

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to amend the present statutory provision which results in bus companies being unable to cross-subsidise their more profitable runs with the lossmakers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: There is no statutory provision preventing a bus operator from cross-subsidising unprofitable services with profitable ones. But the Government believes that it is wrong to restrict competition in order to facilitate cross-subsidisation. It is better for socially necessary but uneconomic services to be supported openly by local authority subsidy.

Under the Transport Act 1985 local authorities must go out to competitive tender for any socially necessary services which operators are unwilling to provide on a commercial basis. This ensures value for money and the Government have no plans for amending these provisions.

Dangerous Materials (Shipping)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations govern the transport of dangerous materials by merchant shipping; and whether such dangerous materials include tins of paint.

Mr. David Mitchell: The transport of packaged dangerous goods materials by merchant shipping is governed by the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1981 (SI 1981 No. 1747) as amended by the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) (Amendment) Regulations 1986 (SI 1986 No. 1069). Tins of paint are defined as dangerous goods when the paint itself is flammable and has a flashpoint of 61 °C or below.

PTAs (Funding)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the representations he has received regarding the proposed changes in the funding of passenger transport authorities;

(2) if he will list the representations he has received in favour of the proposed changes in the funding of passenger transport authorities;

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the responses he has received to his letter, headed "Proposed changes in financing of passenger transport authorities";

(2) if he will make available in the Library copies of all the responses received to his letter, headed "Proposed changes in the financing of passenger transport authorities".

Mr. David Mitchell: Those who made the 45 written responses to the discussion paper are listed as follows. Almost all were opposed. Thirteen hon. Members have also written to me about it. I have discussed the proposal with representatives of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and hon. Members representing constituencies in Greater Manchester.

Copies of all the written responses received up to 30 March were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on that day, as I announced in my reply of that date to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King). I am today placing copies of subsequent responses in the Libraries of both Houses.

Level Crossing (Representations)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether in view of the mislaying of the letter to him dated 15 March sent by the chief executive officer of the Rutland district council objecting to the British Railways (Luffenham) Level Crossing Order he will extend the consultation period to allow for these representations by the council to be properly considered by his Department.

Mr. David Mitchell: While I have still not received a letter from Rutland district council making representations about the Luffenham Level Crossing Order, a copy of the letter has now been obtained from my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham). The representations contained in the letter will be given full consideration if or when the British Railways Board officially applies for the order to be made.

Freightliners Ltd.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the cost per annum of repairing and maintaining British Rail's subsidiary, Freightliners Ltd's fleet of rail wagons; what steps are being taken to reduce this cost; and if consideration has been given to renting wagons from the private sector;

(2) what guidelines his Department has laid down for British Rail and its subsidiary Freightliners Ltd., relating to the repair and maintenance of container wagons by British Rail Engineering Ltd., in the current year and whether the option of renting container wagons from the private sector has been considered;

(3) if he will make a statement on his policy towards British Rail's proposals for investment in its subsidary Freightliners Ltd.;

(4) when he expects to complete his Department's review into British Rail's total demand for container wagons in the light of probable need for additional wagons to run through the Channel tunnel in 1993.

Mr. David Mitchell: The comprehensive objectives set by the then Secretary of State in 1986 on 21 October 1986 at columns 772-74, require BR's non-supported businesses, including Freightliners, to continue to plan on the basis of a required rate of return of 5 per cent. on its programme of new investment. BR is also asked to take vigorous measures to broaden the participation of the private sector in the provision of services to the railway.

Within this framework, it is for BR to assess the numbers and types of wagons needed, taking account of forecast freight movements by rail through the Channel tunnel, and how they should be sourced, repaired and maintained.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Authorities (Armed Forces Casualties)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's guidance to health authorities on reception arrangements for armed forces casualties who will be returned to the United Kingdom for treatment in the event of future war in Europe.

Mrs. Currie: No.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Monklands, West of 15 March, Official Report, columns 553-54, what steps he has taken to encourage local authorities to collect data on (a) the discharge and subsequent care of people from long-stay mental illness and mental handicap institutions, (b) the number of carers in their area, (c) the provision of home help support, district nursing services, social work support, or other services to carers and (d) the number of households with a mentally handicapped member, and the numbers receiving sitting services, respite care or holiday relief schemes.

Mrs. Currie: Local authorities are responsible for deciding what information they require for management of services provided for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people in their areas. The need for central collection of information from local authorities is reviewed periodically, for example a new return on residential accommodation was introduced in 1987.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the number of registered (a) mentally ill and (b) mentally handicapped patients in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority area for each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers of in-patients resident at 31 December in National Health Service mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units managed by this district health authority are given in the table. The people concerned are not registered and may not have been resident in the area of the health authority before their admission as patients. I regret that the figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Number of in-patients resident in mental health hospitals and units in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale heath authority at 31 December

Abortions

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, what information he has as to the medical circumstances which created the need for abortions to be performed in emergency to save the life of the mother in those 126 such cases which have arisen since 1967; and if he will indicate the number of times each of those conditions has been a relevant factor.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is shown in the table.

World Health Organisation

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, what contribution the United Kingdom has made in each of the last five years to World Health Organisation efforts to assess the efficiency of different methods of treatment for drug misusers.

Mrs. Currie: Assessment of the efficiency of different methods of treatment for drug misusers is part of the World Health Organisation programme on prevention and control of alcohol and drug abuse. This is one of the programmes paid for from the organisation's regular budget, of which the United Kingdom's assessed contribution represents 4·77 per cent. of the whole. Within the programme, officials of the United Kingdom Health Departments have contributed to publications and taken part in expert working groups.

NHS (Ancillary Staff)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the latest figures available for the number of ancillary staff employed in the National Health Service, by job title, under the terms and conditions of the Ancillary Staffs Whitley council agreements.

Mr. Newton: Provisional figures show that 115,000 whole-time equivalent ancillary staff were employed in the NHS in England at 30 September 1987. Since the introduction of a revised grading structure in 1986, the agreements of the Ancillary Staffs Whitley council no longer provide for job titles.

NHS Review

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if there is a deadline for the submission of evidence for the National Health Service review; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the findings of the National Health Service review will be published.

Mr. Moore: I should welcome early submission of evidence for the NHS review, although there is no formal deadline. The outcome of the review will be announced to the House, but no decision has yet been taken on the nature of supporting documentation.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many individuals are paid industrial disablement pension; and how many will have this disregarded for the purpose of calculating housing benefit (a) in Nottingham, North (b) in Nottingham and (c) in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Scott: Industrial disablement pension was in payment to about 184,000 people in the United Kingdom in April 1987, the latest date for which information is available. From April 1988, industrial disablement pension is not disregarded for the purpose of calculating housing benefit. Prior to April 1988 a statutory disregard of £4 applied. I regret that the other information requested is not available.

Firemen

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to enable unemployed retained firemen to receive both social security benefits and moneys from incidental and drill fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Payments received by retained firemen in respect of any duties performed by them have no effect on their entitlement to unemployment benefit. Payments they receive in respect of drills, retainers, turn-out and stand-by are treated as earnings for income support purposes but are automatically subject to the higher (£15) disregard. The long-service gratuity is treated as capital. There are no plans to change these provisions.

Single Payments

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number and cost of single payments made by his Department's Corby office in each year since 1983.

Mr. Portillo: In the year April 1983 to April 1984, 4,601 single payments were made by the Department's Corby office. The total monetary value was £214,403. The information requested for the years April 1984 to April 1987, which is the latest complete data available, has been placed in the Library.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons were receiving supplementary benefit from the Corby local office on 1 April 1983, 1 April 1984, 1 April 1985, 1 April 1986, 1 April 1987 and 1 April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not available in the precise form requested.

The number of persons receiving supplementary benefit from the Corby local office in May of each year requested is:

	Persons
10 May 1983	6,218
8 May 1984	6,493
7 May 1985	6,487
6 May 1986	6,395
5 May 1987	5,773

Figures for 1988 are not available.
Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the budget provision per health authority on a per capita basis for cervical and breast cancer screening.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities do not have separate budget allocations for cervical cancer screening. It has been estimated that the average cost of taking and examining a cervical smear is about £10. The allocation given to each regional health authority for the continuing revenue cost of the new breast cancer screening services is based on the financial estimates in the Forrest report and is about £14 per woman screened by mammography including, where necessary, the cost of assessment and diagnosis. Between 1987-88 and 1989-90, on current plans, nearly £55 million will have been provided to set up and run the breast cancer screening service in England.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received regarding manning levels for family practitioner committees; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what the staffing levels of family practitioner committees (a) were in 1983, (b) are now and (c) are forecast to be in 1991.

Mr. Newton: Representations have been received from time to time about resources made available to family practitioner committees for administrative expenditure, about three-quarters of which represents staff salaries. The allocations made for the current year, however, include an overall increase of about 5·5 per cent. in real terms.

The number of staff employed by family practitioner committees fell from 4,670 (whole-time equivalent) to 4,600 between 30 September 1983 and 30 September 1986, the latest date for which figures are available. This reduction includes some staff savings achieved as part of the programme of computerisation of patient registration data which was completed on 31 March 1988; further reductions on this account will be reflected in the figures for 1987 and 1988, when these become available.

No forecasts have been made of future manning levels, but the White Paper on "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249), which was published last November, envisages an increased role for FPCs.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has now received from all family practitioner committees their most recent annual programme and action plan; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Newton: All but one family practitioner committee in England have submitted their current annual programmes during the last six months. Each programme is discussed with the FPC with a view to establishing an agreed action plan for which the committee will be held accountable.

Griffiths Report

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 12 April, at which date the period for taking account of views on the Griffiths report will close; and how long after that the Government will issue their own response to the report.

Mr. Newton: There is no formal closing date for the submission of views on Sir Roy Griffiths' report. We intend to bring forward our own proposals as soon as we have been able to give full consideration to the important issues involved.

Hospital Statistics (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he anticipates bed availability and occupancy figures for Nottingham district health authority for 1987-88 will become available centrally.

Mrs. Currie: We expect to have this information available centrally by the end of August.

Drugs (Adverse Reactions)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 29 March, column 445, what is his policy regarding the providing of information to interested Members when investigations into an alleged failure by a pharmaceutical company to report adverse reactions show that there has been a breach of the statutory procedures.

Mr. Newton: Evidence of cases of apparent failure to report adverse reactions is very rare. Whether or not the public interest would best be served by making the results of investigations into such matters public has to be considered on a case by case basis.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 29 March, column 445, on what date each of the investigations began into alleged failures to report adverse reactions by two pharmaceutical companies; and by when each is expected to be concluded.

Mr. Newton: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to him on 26 February 1988, at column 364. These investigations are complex and I am unable to estimate when they will be completed.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 29 March, column 445, how investigations are carried out by his Department into alleged failures by pharmaceutical companies to report adverse reactions; how many of his officials are normally involved; if the original data of the company is inspected; and who decides whether or not the allegations are substantiated, on the appropriate penalty and on the publicity that should be given to the findings.

Mr. Newton: I refer the right hon. Member to my replies to him on 27 November 1987, at columns 354-55 and on 18 December 1987, at column 931. The number and type of officials involved depends on the needs of the case. The company may be asked to submit original data to the Department. The answer to the other questions would depend on the circumstances of the case and are not the subject of any specific departmental rules or guidance.

Personal Savings

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what estimate he has of the number of people who have savings of (a) £3,000 or more and (b) £6,000 or more for each parliamentary constituency;

(2) what estimate he has of the number of people who have savings of (a) £3,000 or over and (b) £6,000 or over for each DHSS office;

(3) what estimate he has of the number of people of pensionable age who have savings of (a) £3,000 or more and (b) £6,000 or more living in each of Scotland, England and Wales;

(4) what estimate he has of the number of people who have savings of (a) £3,000 or more and (b) £6,000 or more living in each of Scotland, England and Wales.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Income Support

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people would benefit if the capital limits on social security benefits were rasied to £10,000.

Mr. Portillo: The only social security benefits affected by the amount of capital a person has are income support, housing benefit and family credit. The numbers (in thousands) of people who would become entitled to those benefits if the capital cut-off limit were raised to £10,000 are:

	Persons (thousands)
Income Support	6·0
Family Credit:	4·1
Housing Benefit:	152·0

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to supplementary benefit recipients being asked for photostat copies of bank and savings accounts before the new income support grant is granted, with particular reference to those cases where such information is already on record; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: During the exercise to convert supplementary benefit payments to income support it was necessary to ensure that up-to-date information was available on all aspects of a claim. Staff are instructed to ask to see statements, bank books, and so on, but not photocopies of original documents.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will review the contents of those parts of the claim forms for income support and family credit which require claimants to declare capital of more than £2,500 rather than £3,000 and which require the divulging of personal information.

Mr. Portillo: Income support and family credit claimants are asked to provide details when savings are more than £2,500. This is below the £3,000 capital limit in case some assets have to be valued at more than their nominal face value (for example shares or national savings certificates).

Mrs. Jane Tipping

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will answer the letter from the hon. Member for Birkenhead written to him on 22 February regarding the case of Mrs. Jane Tipping.

Mr. Portillo: I wrote to the hon. Member yesterday.

Medical Equipment

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library the report on the maintenance of medical equipment compiled by Mr. David Fernandez.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 November 1987]: The report has now been placed in the Library.

Leeds Western Health Authority (Chairman)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will be taking steps to consult local organisations before making an appointment to the vacant chairmanship of Leeds western health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 April 1988]: We are not required to consult anyone in appointing health authority chairmen. However, we take full account of any nominations we may receive from local or other sources.

Census (Languages)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he hopes to be able to announce the format of 1991 census questions on (a) Scots Gaelic speakers in Scotland, (b) Irish Gaelic speakers in Northern Ireland, (c) Welsh speakers in Wales, (d) speakers of indigenous languages other than English in England and (e) speakers of non-indigenous languages in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 April 1988]: No decisions have yet been taken on the content of the 1991 census. Proposals for Great Britain will be published as a White Paper later this year. It is planned to test the proposed questionnaire in early 1989 and thereafter to lay before Parliament a draft Order in Council prescribing the content of the census. The final format of the 1991 census questions will be included in the census regulations which are expected to be laid before Parliament in 1990.

The 1991 census for Northern Ireland will be taken under separate legislation. This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Hampstead and Haringey DHAs

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will place in the Library all documents regarding the proposed merger of Hampstead and Haringey district health authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the financial basis of the proposed merger between the Hampstead and Haringey district health authorities; and what other criteria are involved;

(3) what discussions he has had regarding the possible merger of Hampstead and Haringey district health authorities; and with whom.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 April 1988]: I understand that North East Thames regional health authority is examining, with the two district health authorities concerned, the possibility of a merger between Hampstead and Haringey health authorities. Consideration of this matter is at an early stage and the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the regional health authority for further information about any proposals which may be made. If, following public consultation, the regional health authority decides to proceed with a proposal for the merger of the two health authorities, such a proposal will need to be approved by Ministers. As part of the approval process we would expect to enter into discussions with a wide range of interested parties prior to any final decision.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the decision to merge the Hampstead and Haringey district health authorities will affect in any way the previous decision to retain the regional cancer screening unit at the North Middlesex hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 April 1988]: No decision has been taken to merge the Hampstead and Haringey health authorities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has also stated that we are not prepared to agree to the closure of the radiotherapy unit at the North Middlesex hospital.

District Health Authorities (Land Holdings)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North on 26 November 1987, Official Report, columns 319-21, if he will list in league order, with the highest at the top, by acreage of land held, district health authority areas within the National Health Service in England, showing the valuation in each case (a) before the recent revaluation and (b) at the present valuation as decided by the district valuer.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 18 February 1988, c. 694]: The preliminary aggregation of the 1987 returns from district valuers has now been completed. The open market value of the NHS estate of approximately 44,000 acres was about £6·8 billion at 1987 prices. This figure is subject to revision as the returns are analysed in detail. A breakdown of the respective 1985 and 1987 valuations by district health authority in a league order by site areas has been placed in the Library.

Nurses

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of nurses per thousand population in each of the regional health authorities.

Mr. Newton: The number of nursing and midwifery staff per thousand population employed in each regional health authority is given in the table:

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent discussions he has had with the trade unions regarding privatisation of the electricity industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I met representatives of the Electricity Supply Trades Union Council on 13 April and we will continue to hold regular meetings to discuss matters of common interest.

Wind Farms

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what role his Department is playing in the study and development of wind farms in both the private and public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is involved in a collaborative programme with the Central Electricity Generating Board which will include evaluating the public acceptability of wind farms. The programme is expected to cost some £30 million and is expected to involve the establishment of three wind farms in England and Wales and, I hope, at least one in Scotland.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of full-time employees in the coal industry for (a) Yorkshire and (b) Don Valley constituency; and what proportion of the number employed eight years ago this represents.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any uranium import contracts or uranium processing contracts have been signed or carried out since 1979 between BNFL plc. or BNFL and NUFCOR of South Africa which have required (a) bilateral, (b) International Atomic Energy Agency and (c) Euratom safeguards provisions.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 25 March 1988]: British Nuclear Fuels plc has a long-standing agreement with the Nuclear Fuels Corporation of South Africa, which was renewed in 1985, to process uranium ore concentrate. All civil uranium imported into the United Kingdom for processing and subsequent re-export is under safeguards.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Freddie Andrews

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will inquire into the handling of the affairs of Freddie Andrews by the Official Solicitor; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will obtain from the Official Solicitor details of all transactions carried out on behalf of Freddie Andrews listing (a) the properties disposed of, (b) the date of sale, (c) the purchaser, (d) the value of property sold and (e) where the sums realised have been deposited; and if he will request the High Court to make available the above information to the Andrews family.

The Attorney-General: No. I refer the hon. Member to my earlier replies to him about this case on 25 February 1988, at columns 257-58.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Namibia

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what status the British Government accord to the United Nations Council for Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not recognise the claim of the United Nations Council for Namibia to be the administering authority for the territory. The United Nations General Assembly acted beyond its competence under the charter in establishing such a body.

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he was represented at the United Nations Council for Namibia conference (a) in Instanbul on 21 March and (b) on past occasions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have not been represented at conferences of the United Nations Council for Namibia, which we do not recognise.

News Conference, Jordan

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's ambassador in Amman has reported to him on the reasons advanced by the Jordanian Government for preventing the broadcast of the recent news conference held by the United States Secretary of State, as reported by Voice of Palestine radio on 10 April; and whether Her Majesty's Government have expressed any concern to the Jordanian Government about this.

Mr. Mellor: We have not raised this matter with the Jordanians.

North Atlantic Assembly (Parliamentary Delegation)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made in the composition of the United Kingdom parliamentary delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend the Lord Colnbrook has replaced the late Earl de la Warr as a member of the delegation.

PRIME MINISTER

London Docklands Development Corporation

Q28. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the chairman of the London Docklands Development Corporation, in order to discuss the finances of the corporation.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

EC (Government's Achievements)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the achievements of Her Majesty's Government since 1979 with regard to the European Community.

The Prime Minister: We have concentrated on making European Community policies cost-effective, relevant and equitable. At Fontainebleau in 1984 we agreed that the United Kingdom should pay only its fair share of the EC budget. That agreement has already saved the taxpayer £3 billion. In our presidency in 1986, and at the Brussels European Council this February, we secured major reforms of the common agricultural policy, including a binding ceiling on agricultural spending and automatic cost-cutting regimes for all commodities.

We have made it the Community's top priority to complete the single European market for goods and services by 1992 so as to give our industry improved access to important markets in Europe and a better base from which to compete in world markets. We have championed measures to help our citizens such as less regulation, cheaper air fares and higher product safety standards.

We supported the entry of Greece, Spain and Portugal into the Community, thereby underpinning their democracy and strengthening NATO. At British initiative the EC member states have agreed an internationally binding basis for closer co-operation in foreign policy. We have supported moves to liberalise the international trading system in the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations, which was launched in 1986 under the United Kingdom presidency.

By modernising our own economy we have been able to argue from strength for up-to-date policies for the Community as a whole. We have taken Britain from the sidelines to the mainstream of Europe.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Prime Minister what child care provision is provided by the Cabinet Office for the pre-school aged children of Cabinet Office employees; what child care provision, for school holiday and/or after-school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

The Prime Minister: At present no child care provision is provided by the Cabinet Office for employees' children. There are no plans to introduce such facilities in the next five years.

Government Employees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister how many employees of central Government are employed in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) each of the English regions, (d) Northern Ireland and (e) elsewhere; and what proportion of the total they represent.

The Prime Minister: Geographical analyses of all employees of central Government (including the National Health Service, Northern Ireland Government and other bodies) are not available centrally. Information for the Civil Service is as follows:

Staff in post at 1 April 1987

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

WALES

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the (a) shortest time, (b) longest time, (c) median time and (d) arithmetic mean time that it took to process straightforward regional development grant applications processed in 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 12 April 1988]: There is no generally accepted definition of a straightforward regional development grant application. Of the total applications dealt with by my Department during 1987, 90 per cent. were processed within four months of receipt. Of these 90 per cent. of cases: (a) the shortest processing time was one day, (b) the longest time was 17 weeks; (c) the median time was eight weeks and (d) the arithmetic mean time was eight weeks. The longer processing time incurred under (b) reflected the need to secure additional supporting information from applicants and to consider policy issues raised by particular applications.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of regional development grant applications under consideration by his Department on 31 March.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 12 April 1988]: 1,935 regional development grant applications are under consideration following the ending of the scheme. I am delighted that so many firms have come forward with applications following my invitation to apply for regional development grants before they were phased out. This total of applications received between January and March compares with only 520 in the same period last year. I am delighted that the manner in which the Government have phased out the existing RDG grant in order to make way for increased expenditure by the WDA and on regional selective assistance has resulted in this massive injection of investment into the Welsh economy.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday and/or after-school care, is provided for employees' children age five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 18 April 1988]: None, but a study is under way to examine the interest in and feasibility of a day care facility for children of Welsh Office staff.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Home Ales, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet the chairman of Scottish and Newcastle Breweries to discuss the situation of the tenants of Home Ales in Nottingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The chairman of Scottish and Newcastle Breweries has not requested a meeting.

I understand that the brewery is in negotiation with its tenants over the terms of their tenancy contracts. This is a commercial matter on which it would not be appropriate for me to comment.

Bovine Somatrophin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the purpose, with particular reference to (a) safety and (b) efficacy of the secret trials currently being undertaken the use of bovine somatrophin in milk production.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 15 April 1988]: The trials which are being conducted by pharmaceutical companies in the United Kingdom and other countries are to provide information on the use of the product under field conditions. Before any such trial involving a medicinal product can take place in the United Kingdom it must be authorised by means of an animal test certificate (ATC) issued under the Medicines Act 1968. Such certificates are issued only when the safety of the product to be used in the trial has been satisfactorily demonstrated.

Section 118 of the Medicines Act prohibits the disclosure of any information supplied to the licensing authority as part of an application. It is therefore not possible to give details about the trials.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Inner London (Further Education)

11. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the future provision of post-16 education in inner London.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under the Government's proposals, each inner London council will be responsible for securing the provision of post-16 education in its area. This will be one of the subjects the boroughs will be required to cover in their development plans.

University Funding

12. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Universities of Dundee and Aberdeen concerning university funding.

Mr. Jackson: While we have received a number of representations, including some from hon. Members, about the position of Aberdeen and Dundee, we have had no recent approaches from the universities themselves. The two universities are in continuing discussion with the University Grants Committee about planning for the future.

37. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss the funding of Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss future funding of Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave on 19 January, at column 675, to the hon. Members for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish) and for Kirkaldy (Dr. Moonie).

Workers Educational Association

13. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the Workers Educational Association to discuss future funding; and if he will make a statement.

46. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the Workers Educational Association to discuss future funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet the Workers Educational Association. Officials from the Department are currently discussing the future of the association with its representatives.

Education Tests (Departmental Correspondence)

14. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from persons or organisations who have submitted information in confidence to his Department about the implications for the preservation of its confidentiality of the recent unauthorised disclosure of a letter from Mr. Paul Gray in the Prime Minister's Office to Mr. Tom Jeffrey in his Office, concerning education tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Teachers

16. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement about proposed future machinery for the determination of pay and conditions for teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are considering responses to the Green Paper "Teachers' Pay and Conditions: A Consultative Document".

32. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the teachers unions to discuss future arrangements for the determination of payment conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Green Paper "Teachers' Pay and Conditions: A Consultative Document" set out the Government's proposals for future arrangements for determining school teachers' pay and conditions. Several organisations have asked to see my right hon. Friend about future machinery and such meetings will take place in the next few months.

Solvent Abuse

17. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will issue a circular to local authorities about the control of solvent abuse by pupils in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Bob Dunn: The Department issued a safety bulletin to all local education authorities in 1984, providing advice about solvent misuse. Guidance specifically on health education concerning solvent misuse was also provided in Her Majesty's inspectorate document "Health Education from 5 to 16", issued to all schools in 1986. My right hon. Friend has no plans to issue further advice.

Home Tutors

18. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the pay and conditions of home tutors.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand the concern of my hon. Friend about the pay and conditions of home tutors in Cheshire. The Department is in touch with the local education authority about the position.

School Closures

19. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications for school closures are currently being considered by his Department; and what is the average length of time they have been awaiting decisions.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is currently considering 84 proposals to cease to maintain schools. The average length of time since the date of publication of these proposals is 5·4 months; this includes the period of two months allowed for the receipt of objections and the further month for the local education authority to comment on these.

Educational Maintenance Allowances

20. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the Association of County Councils to discuss future provision of educational maintenance allowances for 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss future provisions of education maintenance allowances for 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mr. Dunn: No.

Nursery Nurses

21. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has held any recent discussions with the Nursery Nurses Examination Board about career structure for nursery nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No. My right hon. Friend has no powers governing the career structure of nursery nurses. The career development of nursery nurses working in the public sector is the responsibility of their local government employers, but less than one third of those qualifying annually are initially employed in this way.

Further and Higher Education

22. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement concerning the future organisation and funding of higher and further education in inner London.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's intention is that from April 1989 the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC) will have power to fund most non-university higher education in inner London, and that from April 1990 the responsibility for the provision of further education in inner London, and such non-university higher education as is not funded by the PCFC, will transfer from the Inner London education authority to the inner London councils.

Student Finance

23. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the progress of his review on student finance.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr).

GCSE

24. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Eduation and Science what representations he has received on Her Majesty's inspectorate's report on the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave earlier to the hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam).

29. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the effectiveness of funding to prepare pupils for the new general certificate of secondary education examinations.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received various representations from teachers, school governors and others about funding for the GCSE. These, and the recently published HMI interim report on the GCSE, indicate that concern about the availability of resources in schools for the new examinations has generally diminished. The Government have allowed for expenditure of over £100 million in each of the years 1987-88 and 1988-89 for the introduction of the GCSE, including specific grant for books and equipment and for the in-service training of teachers. It is for local education authorities and schools to ensure that the funds are spent where they are most needed.

16-year-olds

25. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase the staying-on rate at the age of 16; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase the staying-on rate at the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: As stated in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper, the Government wish to encourage greater participation in post-16 education and training. My right hon. Friend aims to raise the level of attainment of young people and to encourage a more positive attitude to continuing education and training. He considers that the examination reforms and new forms of provision already introduced, together with the curriculum and other school reforms proposed in the Education Reform Bill, will help to achieve this objective.

Education Reform

26. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further consideration he has given to the advice and information which he will provide to the parents and governors of schools who are considering opting for grant maintained status.

Mr. Dunn: Once the Education Reform Bill has been enacted, my right hon. Friend intends to publish guidance for all interested parties on the proposals for grant-maintained schools. This will include information for parents and governors contemplating grant-maintained status for their school.

33. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations he has had with representatives of ethnic minority groups about the Education Reform Bill; and, in particular, the provisions to abolish the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: Copies of all the consultation documents on the proposed provisions of the Education Reform Bill were sent to a wide range of organisations known to have an interest in education, and further copies were freely available from the Department of Education and Science. Comments were received from a substantial number of organisations representing ethnic minority groups, in response to the various documents, and copies of these responses have been placed in the Library of the House.

43. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish in full the latest version of his proposed national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) earlier today.

44. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any representations concerning the admissions procedure to grant maintained schools which may be established after the enactment of the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Dunn: A significant number of the representations which my right hon. Friend received in response to the consultation document on grant-maintained schools showed an interest in the admissions arrangements which such schools would adopt.

National Association of Head Teachers

27. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to meet the leadership of the National Association of Head Teachers; and what matters he intends to discuss with it.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has accepted an invitation to address the annual conference of the National Association of Head Teachers on 3 June.

LINK Programme

28. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek additional funding for the expansion of the LINK programme in 1989-90.

Mr. Jackson: Funding in 1989-90 for LINK programmes and for the science base generally will be subject to review in this year's public expenditure survey.

Social Sciences

30. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent examination he has made of the adequacy of funding of social sciences in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: The social sciences are mostly funded through the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) and the recurrent grant distributed to the universities by the University Grants Committee. The Advisory Board for the Research Councils each year considers the research proposals and funding needs of the ESRC as part of the preparation of advice on the allocation of the science budget. In allocating funds to universities the UGC takes into account planned student numbers in the social sciences, as in other subjects. The committee is currently reviewing national provision for sociology and social policy as part of its programme of subject reviews. Given these arrangements, my right hon. Friend has not thought it necessary to make any additional examination of the funding of the social sciences.

Advisory Council on Science and Technology

31. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last attended a meeting of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend had an informal meeting with members of the council on 7 December 1987.

Nursery Education

34. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy for nursery and pre-five school education, in the light of the report by Professor Peter Mortimore, "School Matters", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has so far seen only press accounts of this report, which indicate that it did not include any study of under-fives education. But my hon. Friend no doubt has in mind the broad conclusion reflected in its title. The Government accept that children can benefit from pre-school experience but believe they are being realistic in their policy of maintaining both the current discretionary arrangements and level funding of this sector in real terms.

47. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase the level of nursery education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 19 January at column 805.

48. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received urging him to take steps to ensure that the provision of nursery education in inner London is maintained following abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received about 60 representations on this matter.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the average cost per pupil of local authority nursery education in (a) East Anglia, (b) Suffolk and (c) England and Wales;

(2) what is the proportion of local authority education budgets spent on nursery education in (a) East Anglia, (b) Suffolk and (c) England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities do not provide separate figures for expenditure on nursery classes in primary schools. The following table shows the net institutional recurrent expenditure per pupil in nursery schools for 1986-87 and the proportion of the authorities' net recurrent expenditure on education that was spent on nursery schools.

	Expenditure per nursery school pupil £ cash	Proportion of total expenditure Per cent.
East Anglia[1]	1,340	0·2
Suffolk	1,165	0·1
England	1,500	0·4

[1] Cambridgeshire, Norfolk and Suffolk.

Information relating to Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the proportion of children in the three to five year age group receiving private nursery education in (a) East Anglia, (b) Suffolk, (c) Waveney and (d) England and Wales;

(2) what is the number of children attending private nursery schools in (a) East Anglia, (b) Suffolk, (c) Waveney and (d) England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally. Figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the proportion of children in the three to five year age group receiving local authority nursery education in (a) East Anglia, (b) Suffolk, (c) Waveney and (d) England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: Information for areas within local education authorities is not available centrally. In January 1987 the number of children aged under five as a proportion of the estimated three and four population receiving local authority nursery education in East Anglia, Suffolk and England was 10, 14 and 23 per cent., respectively.

Figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, what is the number of children in local authority nursery schools in (a) East Anglia, (b) Suffolk, (c) Waveney and (d) England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: Information for areas within local education authorities is not available centrally. In January 1987 the number of children under five attending maintained nursery schools in East Anglia, Suffolk and England was 1,199, 162 and 49,502, respectively.

Figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Teacher-Administrator Ratios

35. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the five education authorities with the highest teacher-administrator ratio and the five with the lowest teacher-administrator ratio.

Mrs. Rumbold: The figures show the ratio of qualified school teachers to school administrative and clerical staff. They are based on estimates published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) in its "Education Statistics: 1987-88 Estimates".

Local Authority	Five highest teacher/ administrator ratios

Electromagnetic Fields

36. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research he is supporting into the effects of electromagnetic fields on health in general, and on the incidence of leukaemia in particular.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the Medical Research Council is not at present supporting work specifically to investigate the effects on health of electromagnetic fields. The council is, however, supporting several studies on the clustering of cancer cases, including leukaemia, and their possible causes. These studies may establish whether there is any association between the presence of electromagnetic fields and the incidence of cancer.

Research Grants

38. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he seeks from research councils on the subsequent careers of recipients of their grants.

Mr. Jackson: The Department and the Advisory Board for the Research Councils ask the research councils to supply such information as they collect for their own purposes about the first employment destinations of holders of post-graduate student awards. The Department will be discussing with the award-making bodies how the data might be improved and, in particular, how they might be collated on a consistent basis.

School Building

39. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy with regard to privatising the building of new schools.

Mr. Dunn: I have written to my hon. Friend on this matter.

Small Rural Schools

40. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further steps he proposes to take to encourage small rural schools.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) gave him on 16 February at column 819.

Scientific Equipment

42. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will undertake a comparative survey of the scientific equipment available in academic and academically related research in the United Kingdom and other industrial countries.

Mr. Jackson: The Advisory Board for the Research Councils (ABRC) has commissioned a study of scientific equipment in United Kingdom higher education institutions. The board expects to advise my right hon. Friend about the outcome of the study, around the end of the year, taking into account such results as are available of similar studies in other countries.

Child Health and Early Education

45. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he as any plans to implement the findings of the Child Health and Education Study which reported in 1987 on "The Effects of Early Education"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has taken note of the findings of this report, which was commissioned by my Department and has been published. The broad conclusion of the report is that children can benefit from pre-school experience of a variety of forms. The Government have always accepted this and believe that their current policy of maintaining the discretionary basis of provision is therefore right.

Truancy

49. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about his Department's plans to reduce the level of truancy in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The responsibility for taking action on truancy rests with local education authorities and with schools and parents. In the course of preparing circular 2/86, "School Attendance and the Education Welfare Services", and following its publication, the Department received information and representations from interested parties. The Department is considering issuing a further circular relating to school attendance, which would be subject to a similar process of consultation.

Secondary Schools, Northamptonshire

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all secondary schools in Northamptonshire, stating how many pupils are currently in each school and how many empty places exist in each school.

Mr. Dunn: Information on school places is not available centrally. In January 1987 the maintained secondary schools in Northamptonshire and the number of pupils on roll in each school were as follows:

Maintained secondary schools in Northamptonshire
January 1987

Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much is spent per pupil on education in primary and secondary schools; what are the comparable figures in cash and real terms five and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information is provided in the following table.

Net Institutional Recurrent Expenditure[1] Per Pupil in England

	1978-79 £	1983-84 £	1986-87[3] £
Primary Schools
Cash	365	725	895

1986-87 Real Terms[2]	1,035	1,160	1,340

1. Net institutional recurrent expenditure covers the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.
2. The cash prices for the earlier years have been repriced to 1986-87 prices using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.
3. The latest information available on actual expenditure is for the financial year 1986-87.

Expenditure (Yorkshire)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, what is the expenditure per pupil for each local authority area in Yorkshire for each of the past five years.

Mr. Dunn: The available information is given in the table. The figures include the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. They do not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges and revenue contributions to capital outlay.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received concerning the implications of the Education Reform Bill for children with special educational needs.

Mr. Dunn: Numerous representations on the Bill have been received from organisations and individuals. Of these, a substantial minority dealt with its implications for children with special educational needs.

Polytechnics and Colleges of Higher Education (Formation Committees)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in the appointment of formation committees for the polytechnics and colleges of higher education.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has selected the members of over three-quarters of the formation committees and the institutions concerned are today being informed. We hope to complete these appointments shortly.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, when the report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions is being published today. I am also initiating the consultation required by section 3(1) of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987 by writing today to the relevant local authority associations, teacher unions and bodies representing the interests of the governors of voluntary schools setting out my proposals. The text of the letter is as follows:

Text of letter of 19 April from the Secretary of State for Education and Science to the relevant local authority associations, teacher unions and bodies representing the interests of the governors of voluntary schools.

TEACHERS' PAY AND CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT

1. On 27 October 1987 asked the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions to examine and report to me on certain issues. I enclose a copy of the Committee's report which is being published today. The Committee's recommendations are summarised in Chapter 7 of its report. I propose to make an Order giving effect to the recommendations referred to in paragraphs 2 to 6 below. But before I take a decision on what provision I should make, I invite your views. This letter therefore initiates the consultation required by Section 3(1) of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987.

2. I propose to accept the Committee's recommendation that the salaries of all qualified teachers should be raised by a uniform percentage to the figures set out at paragraph 4.4.1 of the Committee's report with effect from 1 April 1988. As a result of accepting the recommendation in paragraph 4.1.16 about the distribution of the £300m, the salaries and allowances for unqualified teachers and the allowance for teachers of the visually impaired and hearing would be increased by the same percentage as for qualified teachers.

3. I propose to accept the recommendation in paragraph 5.3.6 that the rates of the London area allowances should be increased by 7·5 per cent. with effect from 1 July 1987.

4. I propose to accept the recommended increases in the value of the incentive allowances (paragraphs 4.3.9, 4.3.11 and 4.3.12) to the following annual amounts with effect from 1 April 1988.

Rate	Annual Amount £
A	800
B	1,200
C	2,400
D	3,200
E	4,400

5. I see advantages in the Committee's recommendation in paragraph 4.3.7 that the programme of introduction of the A allowances should be accelerated. I had been envisaging that there would be a further 12,000 A allowances from September 1988 with additions of a similar number in each of the two subsequent Septembers. In the light of the Committee's recommendations about accelerating the introduction of A allowances I believe that this further expansion of 36,000 A allowances should be spread over two years rather than three, with 18,000 further A allowances from September 1988 and a further 18,000 from September 1989. This will mean some revisions to the limits relating to incentive allowance A in Annex A to Appendix I of the 'School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1987'.

6. I propose to accept the Committee's recommendation in paragraph 5.4.11 about the social priority allowance.

7. The Order I propose to make to give effect to all of the above would do so by bringing into effect a new School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document. The Committee's remaining recommendations do not require other changes to this year's revision of the Document: I do not therefore propose to change the Document in response to these recommendations. Nor is it intended to revise the RSG settlements for 1988-89 on account of the proposals set out in paragraph 2 to 6 above.

8. Any comments on the proposals set out above and on any other matters raised in the report are invited by 10 May. If you would like to express your views in a meeting would you let my office know of this as soon as possible so that any meetings with myself or officials can take place by 13 May at the latest.

9. Following these consultations a revised version of the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document will be prepared. There will then be opportunity to comment on the precise wording of the amendments to the Document prior to the publication of the new Document and the laying before Parliament of an Order which will give effect to the provisions in the revised Document.

10. The Interim Advisory Committee say that they hope it will be possible for a copy of the report to be seen by teachers in every maintained school. Enough copies of the report are being sent to each local education authority for a copy to be circulated to each school.

SCOTLAND

Recidivism

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the recidivism rate for (a) young offenders, (b) short-term offenders, and (c) long-term offenders, in Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that this information is not available.

Under-Sixes (Education)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he intends to publish the report reviewing the provision of under-sixes education in Scotland;

(2) what expenditure was incurred in compiling the Scottish Education Department report reviewing the provision of under-sixes education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 16 March 1988 given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Student Loan Scheme

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from the British Medical Association-Associate Members group on the subject of a student loan scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received a number of representations from two of the British Medical Association associate members' representatives, including one submitted by the hon. Member, together with a relatively small number of representations from individual medical students, both direct and from hon. Members. All representations received individual replies.

No conclusions have yet been reached on the future pattern of student support. We hope to publish Government proposals in the summer, when the student support review group has completed its work.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total subsidy expressed per head of population of the islands for the last five years paid to the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the form requested.

Water Rates

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the water rate applicable for 1987-88 and 1988-89 for each regional and islands authority in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table below.

Domestic Water Rates 1987-88 and 1988-89

Rating Reform

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the comments by the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments, in its 18th report, on the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) Regulations 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Joint Committee commented on Regulation 12(2)(b) and on the related supplementary inquiry form, contained in schedule 4 to the regulations, by means of which community charge registration officers may make follow-up inquiries of responsible persons in respect of premises in his area as part of the procedures for setting up the community charges register.

The first point made by the Joint Committee relates to whether the supplementary inquiry form is intended to seek information which is supplementary to the information already provided in response to the inquiry form, or which is supplementary to the matters mentioned in the inquiry form. My right hon. and learned Friend's view, as expressed in the memorandum submitted by the Scottish Office to the Joint Committee, was that what was being requested was supplementary information about the matters specified in the form, while the Joint Committee takes the view that, as drafted, the supplementary information relates to information already provided by the responsible person. That criticism of the drafting of the regulations is a question of interpretation, but in my right hon. and learned Friend's view there is no practical difference in the result.

The Joint Committee's second criticism relates to the nature of what may be requested as supplementary information. The instructions to registration officers contained in square brackets in the supplementary inquiry form suggest that documents or evidence might be requested. The Joint Committee says that it does not consider that documents or evidence can constitute information. My right hon. and learned Friend disagrees with that view. In any case, it is important to note that where the information requested does not involve documents or evidence, the point will not arise.

The Joint Committee also questions whether, if documents or information are to be provided, there is provision for them to be returned: and it says that, if documents are information and information is to be "given" to the registration officer its ownership must change. My right hon. and learned Friend does not accept that the word "given" necessarily carries that implication. The intention is simply that the information, whether or not embodied in documents, should be provided to the registration officer in response to his inquiry. Where documents are involved, the registration officer may be expected to return them to the responsible person in due course.

The comments made by the Joint Committee deal with matters of drafting and interpretation and relate only to certain specific uses to which the supplementary inquiry form might be put. They do not otherwise question the regulations, which have been made and are fully in force, and have been debated by Parliament. In particular, the Joint Committee made no comment upon, and has cast no doubt upon, the soundness of the registration process as a whole and the Committee's comments in no way prevent that process from going ahead as planned.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of bus services registered as from 26 January 1987 and the numbers of services discontinued since that date.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of new bus services registered from 26 January 1987 was 6,930 and the number deregistered was 6,229.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is (a) the reduction in conventional bus service provision and (b) the increase in minibus service provision since (i) the implementation of the Transport Act 1985 and (ii) the implementation of full deregulation on 26 January 1987.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information is not available in the form requested. Since deregulation there has been a substantial growth in the number of minibuses which now represent some 10-15 per cent. of the vehicles used on local services. Passengers in over 250 areas are now benefiting.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has assessed the effect on bus transport facilities for the disabled arising from the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee, which was set up under the Transport Act 1985 to advise the Secretary of State, is keeping in close touch with the impact of the Act on the transport needs of disabled people. The Act places a duty on local authorities, in the provision of bus services, to have regard to the transport needs of the public who are disabled. In addition, section 106 of the Act enables local authorities to make grants for providing, maintaining or improving any vehicle, equipment or other facilities to facilitate travel by disabled people.

Passenger Transport Authorities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the precepts and the district share of the total precept levy income paid into each metropolitan county passenger transport authority by each of the constituent districts in 1986-87 and 1987-88;

(2) what is his estimate of the poll tax precept and the district share of the total precept levy income to the paid to each metropolitan county passenger transport authority by each of the constituent districts on the basis of actual spending levels in 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: The figures are given in the following table. Percentage shares under the two systems are based on rateable values and population respectively. As these are fairly stable, year on year, there is very little difference between the shares for 1986-87 and 1987-88.

The change in the percentage share under the new system is a consequence of the introduction of the community charge and is not related to the proposed change to billing.

Notes

[1] Under the community charge system, precepting authorities levy a gross amount on the collection fund to cover all their expenditure. Grant in respect of their expenditure is paid into the district collection fund together with grant for expenditure by other tiers of local government and the share of the national non-domestic rate. It is not, therefore, possible to provide a figure for the passenger transport authority demand net of grant.

General Council of British Shipping

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the recent closure of the Cardiff office of the General Council of British Shipping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no representations. I understand that the office in question is still open at present. It is for the General Council of British Shipping to decide what local offices it wishes to operate.

Roads (Skid Resistance)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the frequency of monitoring the skid resistance of trunk roads and motorways within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 19 January we announced a new policy which now requires the Department's agents to carry out a routine skid resistance survey on all trunk roads and motorways over a three-year period. This will make the best use of the limited number of specialist machines which are available during the summer survey period and the funds available for this work.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what type of material and seal coats are used to provide the necessary skidding-resistance on the trunk roads and motorways in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The type of material and seal coats used to provide skidding resistance on trunk roads and motorways will vary according to the condition of the road, the volumes of traffic using the road and particular characteristics of the site to be treated. The type of treatment chosen for a particular site is a matter of judgment for the local maintenance agent in discussion with the Department's regional office.

Roads (Surfaces)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the allotted funding for the surface testing, and treatment when necessary, for all trunk roads and motorways in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that over the first four years of this new approach the cost of surveying and treating the trunk road and motorway network will be £36 million. Thereafter it is estimated that the annual cost of continuing this policy will be approximately £2·5 million per annum. When the standard is fully implemented financial benefits from accident reductions on trunk roads will amount to £35 million a year, representing a return of £5·50 for every £1 spent.

Motorway Safety

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about his recently announced initiatives to improve motorway safety.

Mr. Channon: On 7 April I announced the outcome of a review of motorway safety begun shortly before last Christmas. Although motorways remain our safest roads, they account for nearly 250 deaths and 1,600 serious injuries each year. And when accidents occur at high speed the consequences are horrific. In the course of our review we looked at where and why accidents happen, ways of improving driving standards and skills, relevant aspects of road design and equipment, and the scope for improvements to vehicles, with the object of improving features which are particularly important on motorways. In the light of the review, we now propose to take action in the following areas:

—encouragement and promotion of better driving skills on the motorway, including encouragement to newly qualified drivers to take additional tuition in respect of motorway driving.

—introduction of mandatory speed limits at all major motorway contraflows and roadworks, and special requirements for heavy goods vehicles in contraflows.

—improved communication with drivers, through more consistent use of matrix signs, and the introduction of new, clearer versions of the "lane restriction" and "end of restriction" signs.

—changes to some regulations and standards for vehicle lighting, and improvements to measures to prevent vehicle fires.

—improvements to the design and protection of roadside features, to make them safer in the event of accidents.

I have also published, and shall be widely distributing, a new leaflet advising motorists on safe motorway driving. I am arranging for copies of this leaflet, and the pamphlet giving fuller details of all the measures to be placed in the Library of the House.

London City Airport

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet able to announce the formal arrangements for public safety zones at London City airport.

Mr. Channon: The London Docklands Development Corporation is today being informed of the arrangements for public safety zones. The Civil Aviation Authority is also making formal arrangements to safeguard the airport in respect of future building in the vicinity which could be a hazard to aircraft flying close to the airport. In accordance with normal practice, the arrangements allow for possible development of the airport over the next 12 to 15 years. But they do no more than keep open existing options for the time being: any such development would be subject to normal planning controls.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Establishment (Leicestershire)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to approve the appointment of 91 additional police officers over the next three years, and 45 new police officers during the current year, as applied for by the chief constable of Leicestershire.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 18 February at column 707.

Nationality Applications

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British nationality he has received during the year 1987; how many of these his Department has commenced processing; and how many remain (a) unacknowledged, and (b) unprocessed.

Mr. Renton: The information is not readily available in the form requested.

In 1987 we estimate that about 290,000 citizenship applications were received of which all but 33,000 had been acknowledged by 11 April. Provisional figures for 1987 indicate that grants of citizenship were made to 64,800 applicants.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British nationality he has received since 1 January 1988; how many of these his Department has commenced processing; and how many remain (a) unacknowledged, and (b) unprocessed.

Mr. Renton: We estimate that we have received about 12,000 citizenship applications since 1 January 1988. Applications are acknowledged and processed broadly in order to receipt. Only a few applications received by post in 1988 have yet been acknowledged since priority has been given to acknowledging those received in 1987.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports he estimates are at present held at Lunar house, received from applicants for British nationality; and what is the minimum, the maximum and the average time during which such passports are held.

Mr. Renton: It is not possible to say exactly how many passports are contained within the 45,000 citizenship applications currently awaiting opening and acknowledgement at Lunar house.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British nationality he estimates have been lost during the past six months; and what steps are being taken in order to find the same.

Mr. Renton: There is no reason to suppose that any applications have been lost.

Mr. Paul Hill (Marriage)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names, addresses and professions of the persons, excluding prison staff, who were present at (a) the marriage and (b) the reception following the marriage of Paul Hill to Miss Maria Seranville at Long Lartin prison: and what was the cost of this ceremony to public funds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I do not think that it would be right to disclose the personal details requested. There were no additional costs to public funds arising from the ceremony.

US Armed Forces (British Citizens)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any requests for extradition of British citizens deserting from the United States armed forces have been received from the United States Government or its armed forces in the last three years in respect of individuals who did not have dual citizenship.

Mr. John Patten: The total number of requests from the United States authorities for the return of deserters from the United States armed forces during the last three years was three. I now understand that one of these requests was in respect of a British citizen who does not also hold United States citizenship. I regret that the information given in my reply to a question by the hon. Member on 12 April, at column 5, was incorrect in this respect.

Inquests (Police Investigations)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the appropriate chief constables as to whether there were any police investigations prior to verdicts being recorded at the inquests of Mr. Vimal Daihjhai, Mr. Peter Peapell and Mr. David Sands and as to whether there have been further investigations subsequently.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the appropriate chief constable that each of these cases was fully investigated by the police both before and after the inquests.

Transfrontier Broadcasting

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made at the ministerial conference in Vienna towards the establishment of a European convention on transfrontier broadcasting; if he expects such a convention to be ready for adoption and signature at the second ministerial conference on mass media policy due to take place in Stockholm in November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I represented the United Kingdom at an informal meeting of Council of Europe Broadcasting Ministers which took place in Vienna on 12-13 April. The object of the meeting was to discuss various outstanding points of difficulty on the draft Council of Europe convention on transfrontier broadcasting with a view to guiding the further work of the Council's steering committee on the mass media which is charged with finalising the text of the draft instrument.

The meeting endorsed the general framework of the draft convention and made useful progress towards resolving a number of issues, including European programme content, duration of advertising, the field of application of the convention, and its enforcement procedures.

The main issue still outstanding concerns the rules governing advertising breaks within programmes, on which no formula has yet been found which satisfactorily accommodates the differing arrangements in individual member states of the Council. Further meetings of the steering committee are plannned over the next few months at which the text will be considered in the light of the ministerial discussions, and it remains our hope that the convention can be finalised and opened for signature at or before the ministerial conference in Stockholm in November.

Residential Care Licence Applications

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will appoint additional staff to clear the backlog of accommodation for residential care licence applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the measures announced by the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex on 16 February, Official Report, column 863, to reduce the delays in the processing of citizenship applications.

Mr. Renton: Good progress has been made as a result of the measures announced, and I am grateful for the co-operation of the staff and trade union side at Lunar House which has helped us achieve this. Of the 150,000 applications for citizenship received before the deadline of 31 December 1987, 117,000 have now been acknowledged, and any passport inside has been returned. Provided the present rate can be maintained, the remaining 33,000 applications will have similarly been dealt with by the middle of May 1988.

It is the Government's aim that all citizenship applications received by 31 December 1987 should be completed within two years, and further measures to achieve this will be announced shortly.

Passports

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to improve the service to those who telephone his Department's passport processing office at Peterborough so that they no longer continually get the engaged tone.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 31 March 1988]: As I said in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 7 March, at column 4, a new 24-exchange line telephone system was installed at the Peterborough passport office in July 1987.

The recorded message facility to which I previously referred is now installed and provides information simultaneously to 12 waiting callers: as this should answer many general inquiries, callers will on average ring off earlier, freeing more lines for incoming calls.

Prisoners (Brixton and Holloway)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were remanded to (a) Brixton prison and (b) Holloway prison for the purposes of social inquiry and psychiatrict reports in each of the years from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 31 March 1988]: Figures relating to remands for social inquiry reports are not available. Numbers of prisoners on whom psychiatric reports were prepared by prison medical officers in the years in question were as follows:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Home Helps

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the pay increase to home helps in the current year; and what was the percentage increase.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 April 1988]: With effect from 1 July 1987 home helps' basic weekly pay was increased by £16·40, which represents 16·95 per cent.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of home help hours available in each unit of management in the Western health and social services board area in (a) 1975-76, (b) 1980-81 and (c) each year since then, including the projection for 1988-89, showing for each year the percentage change on the previous figure and the number of persons receiving home help in each year, and the applications refused.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 April 1988]: The information is given in the following tables.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Clothing, Hats and Gloves

Ms. Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the number of production units classified to clothing, hats and gloves on the register maintained by the Business Statistics Office.

Mr. Atkins: In 1987 there were 9,865 such units classified to group 453 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980, that is clothing, hats and gloves. Figures in respect of the individual headings within that group, and within the production sector as a whole, are published in table 8 of Business Monitor PA 1003.

Records and Tapes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the increase in the volume of United Kingdom trade deliveries of records, CDs and tapes between 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Atkins: Figures released by the British Phonographic Industry show that the percentage changes between 1986 and 1987 in United Kingdom trade deliveries were as follows:

Singles	−6
LPs	0
Cassettes	+7
CDs	+117
Combined Albums	+11

Techsearch Programme (Newcastle)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what support he has given to the Newcastle technology centre's Techsearch programme; what conclusions and evaluation he has made of this programme; and what further development of this programme he proposes to support.

Mr. Atkins: Under the business improvement services scheme a grant of 55 per cent. of the cost of providing database services to eligible small firms (Techsearch) up to a maximum of £145,323 was offered on 13 August 1986 for the period up to 31 March 1989. Techsearch is a pilot project which is monitored by DTI/NE officials to ensure compliance with the terms of the offer before payments are made. Progress measured by numbers of initial subscribers has been satisfactory. It is too early for a fuller evaluation, which will be influenced by the ability of Techsearch to continue on a self-financing basis when grant payments have ended. There are no present plans to support further development on Techsearch.

Northern Region

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the projects in the northern region sponsored under his Department's support for marketing, support for quality, and support for design schemes: to provide a regional breakdown of (a) number of projects and (b) expenditures under each of these three schemes; and if he will list all the consultants engaged in these schemes, and their main or principal office.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The detailed information requested is available only at disproportionate cost. However, the hon. Member may wish to know that in DTI's north-east and north-west regions 232 companies have been assisted under the support for marketing scheme, 494 under the support for quality scheme and 295 under the support for design scheme. Payments made by DTI totalled £0·99 million, £1·82 million and £0·91 million respectively.

Enterprise Scheme

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications for assistance under the DTI enterprise scheme have been received during its first three months of operation; and how many have been granted for each of the consultancy functions being offered.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the period from 13 January, when the consultancy initiatives were launched, and 14 April, 3,929 applications for assisted consultancy were received.

Referral of applications to the relevant scheme contractor (who matches consultant to applicant) takes place on the basis of a short initial Business Review carried out by a DTI enterprise counsellor.

By 14 April, 1,422 applications had been referred, as follows:

	Referrals
(a) Schemes available from 13 January 1988:
Marketing Initiative	638
Design Initiative	243
Quality Initiative	307
Manufacturing Initiative	150
(b) Additional schemes available from 1 April 1988:
Business Planning Initiative	55
Financial and Information Systems Initiative	29

Support for Design Scheme

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications for assistance were received and granted under the support for design scheme for each quarter of its operation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The numbers of applications received and granted under the support for design scheme in each quarter, until its replacement by the design initiative in January 1988, were as follows:

	Applications received	Applications granted
1985
Quarter 2	429	0

Vosper Thornycroft

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of the flotation of Vosper Thornycroft, and the price secured, Her Majesty's Government's policy remains that the compensation to the original shareholders was adequate, prompt and effective.

Mr. Maude: The recent flotation of Vosper Thornycroft is not material to the valuation of the business at the time it was nationalised. The Government's policy is still as was stated by the then Secretary of State for Industry on 7 August 1980, that there was no satisfactory way to alter the compensation terms imposed by the Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Act 1977.

Leyland Bus

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the reply of 12 April, Official Report, column 28, what information he has as to how much of the £680 million of state aid to the Rover Group plc was used to fund (a) the write-off of the debts of Leyland Bus and (b) the restructuring costs arising from its sale, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department receives regular returns from Rover Group giving details of the expenditure of the £680 million in its former commercial vehicle businesses and how this compares with the estimated amounts at the time of the injection. I am sure that the hon. Member will appreciate that these details (including how much, if any, remains to be spent in any business) are commercially confidential.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 28, if his Department was informed of the arrangements made for the payment of the purchase price of Leyland Bus from the Rover Group plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: No. The arrangements for the payment to the Rover Group plc of the purchase price of Leyland Bus were a matter for the companies concerned.

Steel

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the crude steel production of the United Kingdom was produced in (a) each of the standard English regions, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland in the last year for which full figures are available.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The figures are as follows:

Proportion of total crude steel production in 1987

North	18·7
Yorkshire and Humberside	33·2
East Midlands	0·1
South East	3·4
West Midlands	0·6

Working Breakfasts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total cost of the working breakfast in Newcastle on 13 April; how many business people attended; and how many civil servants were present.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The working breakfast in Newcastle on 13 April was the first of six such presentations to be held during the next three months and was not costed separately. The overall estimated cost of these presentations was given in my reply to the hon. Member on 14 March 1988.

Over 200 business people and representatives of major public corporations attended the working breakfast. About 50 civil servants from headquarters and regional offices were present in a working capacity in the reception area, in the associated exhibition and as management and information support.

British Shipbuilders Ltd.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has to what sum of compensation was paid by British Shipbuilders Ltd. to Caledonian MacBrayne for errors in the design and construction of, the MV Isle of Mull; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 April 1988]: No compensation has yet been paid to the Scottish Transport Group though the basis for claims, which are likely to prove considerable, has been agreed. The taxpayer will also have to bear British Shipbuilders' costs for essential modifications to the vessel. These will also be considerable.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to reduce the annual state subsidy paid to British Shipbuilders Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Although no new decisions have been taken since last autumn on the level of annual state subsidy paid to the corporation, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has made it quite clear to the House that the costs of British Shipbuilders are far too high.

Airbus

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if any progress has been made in reviewing the financing and company structure of the Airbus company, following the initiative he took in asking Sir Jeffrey Sterling to review the situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 April 1988]: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 13 April.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Third World Debt

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) Official Report, 14 March, column 429, he will indicate on what basis the figure of £270 million reduction in tax take due to debt write-down has been calculated; and what profit level has been assumed in arriving at this figure.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The estimate was arrived at by comparing the tax paid in 1987-88 with the estimated amounts that would have been paid if no deduction had been available in respect of losses on irrecoverable loans in the tax computations for the relevant accounting periods. The calculations are based on the taxable profits of individual banks for the relevant accounting periods where these have been agreed, and on estimated figures where tax computations have not been finalised.

Taxation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax units paid the basic rate of tax only in 1979-80, 1983-84, and for the latest available financial year; what the total revenue received in respect of those units was, in each of the three years; and what percentage this was of total income tax revenue.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates are as follows:

Tax units liable at basic rate only

Year	Number of tax units[1] (million)	Tax liability (£ million)	Percentage of total tax liability (per cent.)
1979-80[2]	[2]20·9	18,500	81
1983-84	19·6	27,200	78
1988-89[3]	19·7	31,100	70

[1] Single people and married couples.
[2] Including 2·7 million tax units liable only at the reduced rate of 25 per cent. with liability of £250 million (1 per cent.)
[3] Forecast.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield in 1989-90 of an alternative minimum tax of 20 per cent. of gross income minus personal allowances for all taxpayers with incomes in excess of £22,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The full year yield at 1988-89 levels of income from an alternative minimum tax of 20 per cent. of gross income less personal allowances for taxpayers with incomes over £22,000 is estimated to be £130 million. An estimate for 1989-90 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proportion of gross income paid in income tax, national insurance contributions and value added tax by (a) a married man with a non-earning wife and two children and (b) a married man with an earning wife and two children at half, one, one and a half, two, three, five and 10 times national average earnings in 1988-89; and what were the comparable figures in 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Estimates of VAT payments are only available between three quarters and one and a half times average earnings. The available figures are shown in the table.

Notes:
Child benefit treated as negative income tax for consistency with 1978-79 when there were still child tax allowances.
Two earner couple assumed to jointly earn the multiple of male average earnings, split 60 per cent. earned by the husband and 40 per cent. by the wife.

Reliefs and Allowances

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the gross cost to the Exchequer in 1989-90, or the most recent available date, of all reliefs and allowances other than personal tax allowances;

(2) if he will show the proportion of tax revenues forgone in 1989-90, or the most recent available date, through tax reliefs and allowances other than personal allowances which accrued to (a) the top 1 per cent., (b) the top 5 per cent., (c) the top 10 per cent., and (d) the bottom 50 per cent. of all taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The total direct revenue cost of all tax reliefs and allowances other than personal allowances cannot be estimated reliably. Costs of each relief are published annually in the White Paper on the Government's expenditure plans.

The proportion of the cost of reliefs other than personal allowances going to quantile groups of income tax payers can be estimated for reliefs for mortgage interest, the business expansion scheme and pension contributions by employees and the self-employed. Estimates for 1988-89 are as follows:

Quantile group of taxpayers	[1]Per cent.
Top 1 per cent.	9
Top 5 per cent.	24

Quantile group of taxpayers	[1] Per cent.
Top 10 per cent.	36
Bottom 50 per cent.	16

[1] Proportion of cost of reliefs.
Estimates are provisional and subject to error.

Net Earnings

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update to April the information on net earnings provided in his reply of 10 February 1987, to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington), Official Report, columns 177-8.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of the levels of earnings for the top 5 per cent. of earners are not published. The information in the table for April 1979 and April 1987 is based on estimates of these levels derived from distributions of earnings published in the relevant new earnings surveys. Information for 1988 is not available yet. Earnings levels are for full-time men or women as appropriate paid at adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. Taxpayers are assumed to have no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowances.

SAYE Schemes

Sir William Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the cost to the Exchequer for SAYE schemes for the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost to the Exchequer of exempting from tax any interest and bonus received under SAYE contracts is estimated at about £25 million in each of the three years.

Income Tax

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the reductions in income tax liabilities, at 1988-89 income levels, of the proposed 1988-89 allowances, thresholds and rates and comparable figures for the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1988-89 showing (a) the number of tax units, (b) the total amount of reduction and (c) the average reduction per tax unit in each of the following income ranges: under £5,000, £5,000 to £10,000, £10,000 to £15,000, £15,000 to £20,000, £20,000 to £30,000, £30,000 to £50,000 and over £50,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 March 1988]: The table shows estimates of reductions in income tax liabilities at 1988-89 income levels of the proposed allowances, thresholds and rate for 1988-89 compared with an indexed 1978-79 regime. For the comparison, the 1978-79 allowances and thresholds have been indexed in line with the increase in the RPI between December 1977 and December 1987. As child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79, they have been excluded from the comparison.

[1] All information is in terms of tax units that is, married couples are counted as one and their incomes combined.
[2] By reference to the estimated numbers who would be liable to pay tax under the indexed 1978-79 regime; this number is some 1,100,000 greater than the numbers paying tax in 1988-89, some 900,000 in the income range below £5,000 and 200,000 in the range £5,000 to £10,000.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the value to the Treasury of income tax receipts from Scotland in 1985-86, 1986-87, 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of total income tax receipts.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 13 April 1988]: Available information for Scotland is from the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and relates to liability to income tax rather than amount of income tax collected. Total liability in that year in Scotland was £3,420 million, before allowing for mortgage interest relief given at source. This was 8·5 per cent. of the corresponding United Kingdom figure. Information for later years is not yet available.

Budget Proposals (Effects)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average individual gain arising from each relevant component of the 1988 Budget, both at current prices and net of indexation for those at (a) one half, (b) three quarters of average, (c) average, (d) one and a half, (e) two, (f) five and (g) 10 times average earnings; and if he will provide comparable figures for each Budget since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 March 1988]: Information is in the tables. Further information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost. Average earnings are those for men in all occupations paid at adult rates who work a full week and whose pay is unaffected by absence. The level of average earnings for 1988-89, £244·70 per week, is a projection in accordance with the assumptions given to the Government Actuary for reviewing national insurance contributions in paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1987; estimates are therefore provisional.

Allowances

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Exchequer at the 1988-89 tax rates announced in the Budget of the married man's tax allowance in excess of the corresponding single person's allowance; how much of this cost is attributable to taxpayers aged below 65 years; and what is the weekly value of this extra relief to the married man paying income tax at the standard rate.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 March 1988]: The direct revenue cost, at 1988-89 levels of income, of the married man's allowance in excess of the single person's allowance is estimated at £4·7 billion, of which £4·1 billion is attributable to those aged under 65. The extra relief is worth £7·16 per week to a basic rate taxpayer not entitled to age allowance.

Age Allowance

Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the cost in the income tax year 1988-89 of amending the withdrawal rate of age allowance for pensioners incomes over £10,600 per annum so as to prevent any pensioner paying (a) more than a 40 per cent. effective tax rate and (b) more than a 25 per cent. effective tax rate.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 March 1988]: The full year cost of reducing to 40 per cent. the effective rate on the band of income over which age allowance is withdrawn would be about £1·5 million at 1988-89 levels of income. An effective rate of 25 per cent. could be achieved only if age allowance was not withdrawn at all, which would cost about £190 million. Both costs are calculated by comparison with the income tax regime for 1988-89 proposed in the 1988 Budget.

Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year since 1979 the amount of debt written off in each of the industries privatised, showing the amount of this expenditure which was met from (a) the relevant departmental programme as given in the public expenditure White Paper and (b) the reserve.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 March 1988]: The normal practice on privatisation (of a nationalised industry or company wholly or majority owned by Government) is to repay, rather than write off debt. This repayment may be financed from the company's existing resources, the injection of new equity, or new debt finance. In some cases, the Government provide the finance to repay debts (for example, by an equity injection). Such finance is shown in the relevant departmental programme of the public expenditure White Paper. Subsequent sales of the Government's interests in a company are recorded in the privatisation programme in the PEWP.

National loan fund debt has been formally written off only in the following cases:

Year	Company	Amount £
1980-81	National Freight Corporation (under Section 45 of the Transport Act 1980)	100,000,000
1982-83	British Transport Docks Board (under Section 6(1) of the Transport Act 1981)	81,293,616
1984-85	British Telecom (BT (Extinguishment of Loans) Order 1982)	2,789,865,772
1986-87	BAA (under section 3 of the Airports Act 1986)	43,503,340

However, these write-offs had no direct effect on public expenditure in as much as they represented a reconstruction of the balance sheets of the industries concerned. In each case, having had NLF debt written off, the successor company issued new securities to be held by the Secretary of State as assets of the Consolidated Fund pending realisation.

Student Covenants

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of students supported by covenants who, following the measures announced in the Budget will (a) receive an increase in grant from their local education authority and (b) receive no such increase; and if he will give (a) the saving to the Exchequer in withdrawal of the tax relief on student covenants and (b) the expected cost of any increase in grant payments which results from the Budget measures.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Under the Budget proposals student covenants made on or after 15 March 1988 will not be eligible for tax relief. But students receiving payments under covenants made before 15 March will continue to be eligible for tax repayments under the previous rules. The changes in levels of grant paid by local education authorities apply essentially to new students.

The yield to the Exchequer from the withdrawal of tax relief on new covenants to students is estimated at £35 million in 1988-89 rising to £135 million by 1991-92. The cost of the increase in grant payments is estimated at some £15 million in 1988-89 rising to about £50 million in 1991-92.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the saving that would accrue to the Exchequer from limiting all mortgage tax relief to the basic rate in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The direct revenue yield in a full year, at 1988-89 income levels, from restricting mortgage interest relief to the basic rate is estimated to be £280 million. This estimate is based on the mortgage interest rate of 10·25 per cent. at the beginning of 1988-89 and makes no allowance for the effect of any consequential changes to the distribution of outstanding mortgages.

Personal Tax Allowance

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the question of making the personal tax allowance fully transferable between the spouses where the income into the household is low; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 15 April 1988]: We continue to receive representations from time to time in support of the system of transferable allowances for husband and wife described in the 1986 Green Paper, "The Reform of Personal Taxation" (Cmnd. 9756).

In his Budget my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed a new system of independent taxation of husband and wife to take effect from April 1990. Under these proposals there will be a new married couple's allowance which will go to the husband unless he has insufficient income to use it himself, in which case any unused part can be transferred to his wife.

Taxation Receipts

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the value to the Treasury in 1987-88 of (a) expenditure taxes raised in Scotland and (b) national insurance and other contributions raised in Scotland; and if he will express both figures as a percentage of total Treasury receipts in respect of these two categories.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 13 April 1988]: This information is not available.

Multiple Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has estimated the effect of the withdrawal of multiple mortgage tax relief on the take-up of low-cost 100 per cent. mortgages being offered by the Nationwide Building Society to nurses and announced by the Minister of Health, on 15 December 1987, Official Report, columns 495-6.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Take-up of mortgages being offered by the Nationwide Anglia Building Society under the special mortgage scheme for nurses and other National Health Service staff will depend on many factors. It is not possible to produce estimates of the impact which the changes to mortgage interest tax relief proposed in the 1988 Budget will have on take-up.

Consumer Credit (Tax)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in favour of a tax on consumer credit; what response he made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received no recent representations.

Tax Credit

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of introducing a system of tax credits on the basis of the personal income tax threshold and rates proposed for 1988-89 and of the new social security system, assuming that no person in receipt of benefit would be made worse off; and if he will give the estimated cost for each of the next five years assuming that (a) the rate of inflation averages 4 per cent. per annum, (b) the lowest rate of income tax is reduced to 20 per cent., (c) tax thresholds rise at twice the amount needed to keep pace with inflation, and (d) benefits are increased in line with inflation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: It is not possible to estimate the cost since my hon. Friend has not provided sufficient information about the types of individual who would be covered by the tax credit scheme or about the level of tax credits which would be payable.

ENVIRONMENT

CFCs and Halons

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, Official Report, column 119, what action he is taking to help producers and users of chlorofluorocarbons and halons to switch to environmentally safe substitutes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Montreal protocol itself provides an incentive to switch to environmentally safe substitutes even before consumption of CFCs and halons has to be reduced. British producers and users are actively engaged in research and development. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has awarded a grant for development of a process for recycling CFCs used in the manufacture of polyurethane foam. He will consider any application for support for research and development of substitute products, technology or processes against the criteria and objectives of the schemes which his Department operates.

Green Belt

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in the light of the judgment in the Queen's Bench Division on 29 March in the case of Regina v. Secretary of State for the Environment, ex parte Enfield London borough council.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are considering the implications of the judgment in this case.

Richmond House

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) of 28 March, Official Report, columns 302-3, whether consideration was given to the use of his own staff for the valuation of Richmond house prior to the decision to employ outside contractors.

Mr. Chope: No. For the reasons I have already explained in my answer to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle), I decided that an independent valuation was required in this case.

Common Land

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will place in the Library copies of the responses to the Department's common land consultation paper.

Mr. Waldegrave: Some 336 responses were received to this consultation paper. I have today arranged for copies of those where the respondents have agreed to their comments being open to public inspection to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Planning Applications

110. Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of recent announcement that many major planning applications will require environmental assessments in accordance with EC directive 85/337 from 3 July, he has any proposals to streamline the development control system at local authority level in order to reduce delays in handling planning applications.

Mr. Waldegrave: We expect only a small proportion of applications to require environmental assessment in accordance with EC directive 85/337. The figures which we publish quarterly show that a significant proportion of authorities find it perfectly practicable to deal with planning applications promptly under the existing system. We have commended to all authorities the National Development Control Forum's recent guidelines for the handling of planning applications.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The 1987-88 provisional outturn for expenditure on official hospitality by my Department (including the PSA) is £66,000.

Don Valley UDC

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the names of (a) the chairman and vice-chairman and (b) the other members of the new urban development corporation in the lower Don Valley of Sheffield.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 18 April 1988]: I hope to do so as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Joint Defence Procurement

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent he co-operates with other Commonwealth countries in joint defence procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is regular contact with various members of the Commonwealth to explore co-operative opportunities in joint defence procurement, and I expect this process to continue. A number of equipments have resulted, including the CL89 drone and a magnetic anomaly detector with Canada, and the Ikara anti-submarine system, Barra sonobuoy and Jundivik target drone with Australia.

Mr. Peter Peapell

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work Mr. Peter Peapell was involved in whilst in the employment of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Mr. Peter Peapell, was a lecturer at the Royal Military college of science, Shrivenham.

Dr. John Brittan

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work Dr. John Brittan was involved in whilst in the employment of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our policy to disclose details of the work of employees at the Ministry of Defence.

Professor Keith Bowden

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Professor Keith Bowden was ever employed by his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Professor Keith Bowden was a part-time member of one of the advisory boards operating under the auspices of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council.

Mr. Richard Pugh

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Mr. Richard Pugh was ever employed by his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Nuclear Weapons Transport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the conclusions of his Department's constant review of procedures concerning nuclear weapons convoys following an incident in which one of these convoys was left standing on a public road by a locked gate of RNAD Dean hill on 9 April; whether any military of civil organisation was requested to grit the roads used by this convoy; what steps his Department has taken to seek to improve the road from West Grinstead to RNAD Dean hill subsequent to the accident involving a weapons convoy in January 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As has been the practice of successive Governments, I am not prepared to discuss the movements of nuclear weapons or their associated procedures, nor to confirm or deny that they may have been in any particular location at a particular time.

Harrier GR5

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place the order for production of the second batch of Harrier GR5s.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am pleased to announce that, following the earlier announcement of the placing of orders for long lead items, an order is being placed with British Aerospace for the production of a second batch of 34 Harrier GR5s, making a total of 96 ordered for the Royal Air Force. Deliveries are scheduled to start in 1990. the additional aircraft will maintain the Harrier GR5 force into the 21st century.

Belize (Overflying)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum height at which Royal Air Force aircraft are permitted to fly over land in Belize.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 18 April 1988, at column 336.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the land area of Wales is included within the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Freeman: The whole of the land area of Wales is included within the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average duration of a low-flying sortie by a fast jet.

Mr. Freeman: The average duration of a low-flying sortie by a fast jet is approximately 42 minutes.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 3.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying area 3 covers (a) part of the county of Cornwall and (b) the parliamentary constituencies of St. Ives, Falmouth and Camborne, and most of the constituency of Truro.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of complaints received about low flying in 1987 were identified as relating to (a) British military aircraft, (b) United States Air Force aircraft and (c) other military aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 15 April 1988, at column 249.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the reasons for the decline in the number of low-flying sorties over the United Kingdom in 1987 as compared with 1986; and whether he expects this downward trend to continue in 1988.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying activity is influenced by several factors, including the number of aircrew in training, their experience, timing of major exercises, budgetary constraints and the weather. While no increase in low-flying activity is expected for the foreseeable future, the reduction in low-flying activity between 1986 and 1987 was very small and not considered significant.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many confirmed breaches of low-flying regulations in each year since 1974 were caused by inadvertent negligence on the part of aircrew;

(2) how many confirmed breaches of low-flying regulations in each year since 1974 were caused by wilful negligence on the part of aircrew.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested cannot be provided without disproportionate effort.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 21 January, Official Report, column 776-7, what impact the planned reductions in Royal Air Force fast jet operational training flying hours is expected to have on the number of low-flying sorties over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: It is too early to quantify the expected reductions in fast jet flying hours referred to in the answer I gave the hon. Member on 21 January, although the effect on low-flying sorties is likely to be minimal.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum height at which Royal Air Force aircraft are permitted to fly over land in Norway.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: RAF fixed wing aircraft training over land in Norway may be authorised to fly down to a minimum height of 250 ft in Norwegian low flying areas. RAF helicopters may fly below 500 ft.

RAF (Accident Statistics)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the accident rate for Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 18 April 1988, at column 336.

Tornado Crash, Nevada

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the crash of a Royal Air Force Tornado in Nevada in late March.

Mr. Freeman: On the 30 March a Royal Air Force Tornado GR1 of 20 Squadron, RAF Laarbruch crashed in the Nevada desert, USA during the course of the tactical flying exercise, Green Flag. Both crew safely ejected.

The Royal Air Force has convened a board of inquiry into this accident, which will examine fully all the circumstances with a view to establishing its cause, and preventing recurrence. A summary of the board's findings will be published in due course in the usual way.

Aircraft Accidents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all major accidents to British military aircraft in 1987, giving the date, location and type of aircraft in each case.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

WALES

Cancer Screening

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to increase capacity in health authority laboratories in Wales which handle cervical cancer smear tests; how many additional laboratory staff have been employed in each of the Welsh district health authorities to deal with cervical cancer smear tests in the past 12 months; what are the procedures for dealing with abnormal cervical cancer smear results; what private clinics in Wales give cervical cancer smear tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The cervical cytology screening service is the responsibility of individual district health authorities. A total of £800,000 a year of central funds has been allocated to authorities in Wales to help them improve their cervical screening services. Laboratory staff and equipment are two of the uses to which these funds have been put.

Figures for the number of laboratory staff employed in 1987 are not yet available, but I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when they are to hand.

The procedure for dealing with abnormal cervical smear test results is a matter of operational policy for district health authorities to determine in the light of guidance given in Welsh Office circular WHC(86)31.

Information is not held centrally on smear tests in private clinics.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the average waiting time for the results of cervical cancer smear tests for each of the Welsh district health authorities for 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office is monitoring the cervical cytology screening service on an annual basis. The most recent information relates to the quarter ended 31 March 1987 and was given to the hon. Gentleman in my letter to him of 11 January 1988. As I also explained in that letter, the waiting times for results during the first quarter of 1987 do not reflect the impact of developments since then including the recurring allocation of the additional £400,000 to health authorities in 1987-88. Authorities have been asked to provide up-to-date information on the time taken to notify results in connection with the annual review of their performance which will take place in the summer.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with British Rail about links from the Channel tunnel to Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend discussed the Channel tunnel with the chairman of British Rail on 5 February. He underlined the importance to Wales of good links for passengers and freight.

ENERGY

Magnox Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current progress of the long-term safety reviews for the Magnox nuclear reactor programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB has completed its reviews of Bradwell and Berkeley Magnox stations and the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate has published its findings of the assessments of these reviews. Copies of the reports have been placed in the Library of the House. The SSEB has nearly completed its review of Hunterston A Magnox station and the HSE expects to publish NII's findings of the assessment later this year. Assessments are in hand for the other Magnox stations.

Nuclear Safety

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the agreement signed on 31 March between the Health and Safety Executive and the Soviet Atomic Energy Authorities on mutual co-operation on nuclear safety matters, in so far as it affects the pursuit of his departmental responsibilities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: On 31 March 1988 the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate initialled proposals for an arrangement with the state committee on the supervision of nuclear power safety of the USSR on the exchange of information on nuclear safety matters. I welcome these as a further sign of international co-operation on nuclear safety.

Wind Farms

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to evaluate the prospects for public acceptability of the three wind farms announced by his Department at the recent British Wind Energy Association conference in London.

Mr. Michael Spicer: One of the main objectives of the wind research and development programme to be carried out in collaboration between my Department and the Central Electricity Generating Board is to evaluate the public acceptability of wind farms.

Advanced Gas-cooled Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are (a) the current levels of support and (b) the levels of support, given by his Department each year since 1970, towards research on decommissioning techniques for advanced gas-cooled reactors; and through which organisations research support has been given.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Research support from the Department of Energy into decommissioning techniques is channelled through UKAEA R and D programmes. The Department supports generic research into decommissioning techniques of general applicability to nuclear plant. Funding is estimated at £0·71 million in 1987-88, and was £0·60 million in 1986-87 and £0·30 million in 1985-86. This work is not related to specific reactor types. Support for research, development and operational expenditure relating to the demonstration decommissioning of the Windscale advanced gas-cooled reactor in 1987-88 is estimated at £2·4 million, and was £1·9 million in 1986-87 and £3·7 million in 1985-86. Total support for the project to date is estimated at £15 million.

Comparable figures for earlier years are not readily available.

PRIME MINISTER

Turkey

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to Turkey, she took the opportunity to discuss the prospects of the sale of United Kingdom nuclear reactors to Turkey.

The Prime Minister: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to Turkey, she raised the matter of the imprisonment of political dissidents, peace campaigners and trades unionists in Turkey.

The Prime Minister: No. Since Mr. Ozal's election in 1983, there have been substantial improvements in human rights in Turkey.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what is the estimated cost of the prosecution case against Jean Hutchinson and Georgina Smith in which the Greenham Common byelaws were found invalid; what is the estimated cost of the appeal against this decision; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: This prosecution was commenced prior to 1 October 1986 when the Crown Prosecution Service was formed and took over the conduct of the case. The information to assess the costs incurred prior to 1 October is no readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Since 1 October 1986 the legal fees expended to date are approximately £3,600. I am unable to estimate the future costs of the case, which is at present the subject of an appeal.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Attorney-General if he will state the detailed criteria governing eligibility for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: The precise criteria are set out in the Legal Aid Acts 1974 and 1982 and regulations made under them. Broadly the arrangements are as follows (the financial limits were revised on 11 April):

Civil Legal Aid
The applicant must have reasonable grounds for taking or defending the proceedings. His disposable income must not exceed £5,765 a year and his disposable capital must not exceed £5,000, or he must be in receipt of income support. Decisions on granting civil legal aid in individual cases are made by the legal aid administration of the Law Society.

Legal Aid for Criminal Proceedings
It must be in the interests of justice for the applicant to receive legal aid and, having regard to his disposable income and capital, his resources must be such that he requires assistance in meeting his costs. Decisions on the granting of criminal legal aid and assessment of contributions in individual cases are made by the court.

Advice and Assistance
The applicant's disposable income must not exceed £122 a week or he must be in receipt of income support or family credit. For advice and assistance his disposable capital must not exceed £850. For assistance by way of representation (ABWOR), the applicant's disposable capital must not exceed £3,000, or he must be in receipt of income support. Decisions on the approval of ABWOR in individual cases are made by the legal aid administration of the Law Society. Legal advice and assistance is available from a solicitor without prior authorisation.

If the hon. Member has a particular problem in mind perhaps he would care to write to the Lord Chancellor.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding the export of Land Rovers to South Africa for use by the South African military and police.

Mr. Alan Clark: Military and paramilitary versions of the Land Rover are subject to export licensing. Any application to export such vehicles to South Africa would be likely to be refused. However, the basic Land Rover, which has a widespread civilian and commercial use in South Africa, can be freely exported. To prohibit their export would be unreasonable interference with normal civil trade with South Africa.

Northern Region

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the recommendations so far agreed of the seven sector working parties established in the northern region of his Department; and if he will place in the Library the working papers of those working parties.

Mr. Atkins: The sector working groups do not make recommendations. The groups were formed to facilitate the informal exchange of ideas between industrialist and academic members on such issues as technology and training. They are not Government bodies or responsible to my Department and it is therefore not appropriate to place their working papers in the Library.

Business Improvement Services Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the annual expenditure in each British standard region on grants under the business improvement services grant scheme; what it was for the last half year; what was the share in the national total of such expenditures; what steps are being taken in the northern region to promote this grant scheme; and what liaison arrangements exist between the Tyne and Wear and Teesside urban development corporations in the administration of this scheme.

Mr. Atkins: Expenditure on the business improvement services scheme in the English regions, for which my Department is responsible has been as follows:

	1985		1986		1987		October 1987-March 1988
	£000	per cent.	£000	per cent.	£000	per cent.	£000	per cent.
North East	188	6	1,206	10	1,886	13	981	17
North West	1,488	45	5,358	44	4,259	30	1,634	29
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,493	45	5,433	45	7,414	52	2,951	52
East Midlands	152	5	57	1	715	5	112	2
TOTAL	3,322	100	12,055	100	14,274	100	5,678	100

The regional distribution results from the selection of eligible areas, on criteria determined by the European Community regulations. Funds available under the scheme are now substantially committed, so it is no longer appropriate to promote it. The administration of the scheme lies with my Department.

Experience from the business improvement services scheme has been valuable in devising the new measures contained in the enterprise initiative. The latter is receiving widespread and extensive publicity in all areas of the business community, including of course Tyne and Wear and Teesside.

Blyth Valley

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what new proposals he has to encourage private sector investment in Blyth Valley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Private sector investment will be encouraged by the enterprise initiative, with its help for design, quality, marketing, manufacturing systems, business planning and financial information systems; regional enterprise grants for investment and innovation; regional selective assistance where necessary to bring about desirable projects; exports; research and technology; and in the relationship between business and the world of education.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate the amount of industrial support given to Blyth Valley since 1985.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1985, £11·93 million of industrial support has been approved or offered through the regional selective assistance, revised regional development grant and support for innovation schemes to firms in the Blyth Valley parliamentary constituency area. Individual payments of over £25,000 under the original regional development grant scheme have, in addition, amounted to £2·4 million in the three calendar years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

New Zealand

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the latest figures for the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and New Zealand.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the first two months of 1988 trade between the United Kingdom and New Zealand showed a crude deficit of £21·9 million.

These figures should be treated with more than the usual caution because of major changes to the Customs procedures introduced in January 1988, details of which were given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page), on 7 December 1987, at columns 34-35.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Butcher: The DTI encourages child care schemes where there is a clear need, where the scheme is financially viable without continuing subsidy and commands sufficient local support for its effective administration.

Any scheme would need to be financially self-supporting, although accommodation would be provided free of charge if it were available and suitable. In the event that accommodation was not available the Department would be prepared to cover the cost of securing outside premises for the first year of operation. There are at present no schemes operating in this Department. However, discussions have been held which may result in the setting-up of holiday play schemes in south Wales, and interdepartmentally, in London.

EC Trade Mark Office

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations Her Majesty's Government are making to ensure that the proposed European Economic Community trade mark office is sited in London; and what financial provision it proposes to achieve this.

Mr. Butcher: London has a very strong case, and we will continue to pursue it with vigour with our Community partners. We have made it clear that we are prepared to back our bid with financial support, subject of course to the approval of this House, and the Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill currently awaiting its Second Reading in this House contains the necessary enabling clause. It would not, however, be appropriate to divulge what we have offered at the moment.

Company Account (Prosecutions)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many prosecutions have been initiated by his Department against companies for failing to register their accounts in each year since 1958; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The available information, which relates mainly to prosecutions of directors rather than companies, is as follows:

Prosecutions initiated for failure to file[1]

1959	514

[1] Prosecutions for failure to deliver accounts can be initiated only against individual directors. Prosecutions for failure to deliver annual returns can be initiated against companies and/or their officers. The majority of prosecutions are, however, initiated against individual directors.

[2] Until 1978, when the separate filing provisions for accounts and annual returns contained in the Companies Act 1976 began to take effect, accounts were required to be annexed to the annual return. There was no separate offence of failure to deliver accounts.

[3] Figures are now produced on a financial year basis.

Inward Investment

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many offices of the Government and their agencies in the United States of America are involved in encouraging investment by United States companies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The encouragement of inward investment from the United States, on a national basis, is the responsibility of the Invest in Britain Bureau of the Department of Trade and Industry. The bureau operates in the United States through the embassy in Washington and the 10 consulates general. In addition the Scottish Development Agency, the Welsh Development Agency and the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland have a total of six representative offices in the USA.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will take steps to encourage and assist industry to develop alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons;

(2) what provisions there are under his Department's enterprise initiative programme for the chemical industry to receive assistance for the development of alternatives to ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Atkins: Assistance to companies which is available within the enterprise initiative is described in the White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise", presented on 12 January (Cm. 278) and in the enterprise initiative booklets, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Chemical companies within the relevant eligibility criteria should make full use of this assistance.

Companies themselves are, of course, best placed to assess the implications of changes in their markets. The Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer gives encouragement to the commercial development of alternatives and I understand that industry, including users of controlled substances, is doing this.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 18 April 1988]: During the financial year 1987-88 this Department has incurred expenditure of approximately £300,000 on official entertainment and hospitality. This excludes similar expenditure incurred as an integral part of external expenditure programmes.

TRANSPORT

Roads (Maintenance)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost of the annual maintenance and upkeep of the United Kingdom's trunk roads and motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The average cost per mile of all maintenance on trunk motorways and other trunk roads in Great Britain is estimated to be about £42,000 in 1988/89. Comparable figures for Northern Ireland are not available because of the different classification of roads there.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that no extension of the practice of securing the management of motorway maintenance by engineering consultations, as set down in "Policy for Roads in England: 1987," Cm 125/1, will take place until the initial five-year contract periods in Greater Manchester and south-west Yorkshire have been completed; and if he will publish his Department's assessment of the relevant consultant's performance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I see no reason to delay assessment of the consultants' performance until the end of the five-year period. The Department intends to carry out in the next few months an assessment of the cost and the level of service of contracted-out motorway maintenance in comparison with those of conventional agency arrangements. We intend to present the results and conclusions of the appraisal to the standing committee on highway maintenance.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to publish any audits resulting from his Department's proposal for the technical auditing of motorways and trunk road maintenance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Technical audit is intended to improve the performance of the Department's agents and consultants through the indentification of good practice that can be brought to the attention of other agents and consultants. The Department intends to commence technical audit on a general basis in 1989-90. The Department will discuss with representatives of its agents and consultants whether publication of individual audits would help or hinder the objective.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish immediately the details of the contract between his Department and the engineering consultants engaged in motorway maintenance for his Department in Greater Manchester and South and West Yorkshire; and if he will make it his policy to publish future such contracts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The details of all departmental contracts are commercially confidential. They are not published. I am placing the model agreement for motorway maintenance commissions in the Library.

A50 (Stoke-on-Trent)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) pursuant to his parliamentary reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, 25 March, Official Report, column 267, about the A50, if he will name the main roads in urban areas which have all the following: (a) a higher traffic count than on the A50 at the Meir Stoke-on-Trent, (b) a percentage of heavy vehicles of over 19 per cent. and (c) within 5 miles of the point where the traffic count is taken, have only one main lane in each direction and have private housing bordering on to the road;

(2) pursuant to his replies about the A50 to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, 25 March, Official Report, column 267, which of (a) the roads named as having the highest traffic counts and (b) the roads in the west midlands named as carrying a higher volume of traffic than on the A50 at the Meir Stoke-on-Trent, have a percentage of heavy vehicles greater than the 19 per cent. at the Meir;

(3) pursuant to his answers to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, 25 March, Official Report, column 267, how many traffic lanes there are at the points where the traffic counts were taken for (a) the A50 at the Meir, Stoke-on-Trent and (b) for those built up roads having the highest traffic count; and if he will express the traffic count figures in terms of traffic per 12 hours per traffic lane;

(4) pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, 25 March, Official Report, column 267, as to the A50, for those parts of the roads within five miles of the point where the traffic count is taken, what is the maximum number of traffic lanes on the (a) A50 at the Meir, in Stoke-on-Trent and (b) roads named as having the highest traffic count; and if he will express the traffic count as the number of vehicles per minimum number of traffic lanes on these roads;

(5) pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South on 25 March, Official Report, column 267, how many of the roads in the west midlands conurbation named as carrying higher volumes of traffic than on the A50 at the Meir, Stoke-on-Trent, have, within 5 miles of the point where the traffic count is taken (a) only one main lane in both directions and (b) houses bordering directly on to the road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The requested information is not readily available. I shall write to the right hon. Member.

Ships (Radio Officers)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the circumstances under which permission is granted for (a) any vessel and (b) a passenger ferry to travel without carrying a radio officer.

Mr. David Mitchell: Radio communications equipment on ships has become simpler to operate over recent years. Use of the on-board radiotelegraphy (morse) — which requires a radio officer — is declining in favour of simpler and more effective radiotelephone systems.

Circumstances in which the Department is prepared to grant passenger or other vessels exemptions from the relevant regulations are considered on a case-by-case basis. They take into account both guidelines issued by the International Maritime Organisation and the results of trials carried out by the Department on the introduction of new radio equipment and practices.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to publish the report of the public inquiry into the east London river crossing and to announce his decision on the project.

Mr. Channon: The inspector's report is being given very careful consideration. I cannot yet say when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I will be able to announce our decision and publish the report.

Air-sea Rescue Services (Helicopters)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there has been any discussion or consultation between his Department and the Civil Aviation Authority as to whether the replacement of Sea King helicopters with Wessex helicopters at RAF Coltishall may reduce the effective capability of the air-sea rescue services in the event of a civilian emergency.

Mr. David Mitchell: The deployment of military search and rescue helicopters is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Defence, but he consulted my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport about the planned changes. The new deployment of RAF helicopters on the east coast will more than meet the minimum criteria recommended by the Helicopter Coverage Group, and my right hon. Friend is satisfied that they adequately meet the civil requirement. The Civil Aviation Authority is not responsible for search and rescue arrangements.

Underground Trains

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has undertaken or commissioned concerning the design and construction of underground train carriages on the open plan system adopted by the MRT in Singapore.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 13 April 1988]: Under the terms of an agency agreement between my Department and the Mass Rapid Transit Corporation, inspecting officers of railways have inspected and carried out safety audits of the Singapore system. These inspections included the rolling stock and, in accordance with the agreement, reports have been made to the board of the MRT Corporation.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will pay an official visit to study and report on the design and operation of the MRT subway system in Singapore.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 13 April 1988]: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for drawing my attention to certain crime prevention aspects of coach design, including that of the Singapore MRT system, and when an opportunity presents itself I shall look closely at the open plan feature to which my right hon. Friend has drawn my attention.

Road Programme

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to add any further schemes to the road programme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 18 April 1988, c. 370]: The estimated works cost of schemes 1 and 4 includes sums of £5·2 million and £2·2 million respectively shown in table 4 of the White Paper "Policy for Roads in England: 1987" (Cm. 125).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Unemployment and Crime

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has made of any correlation between the change in regional unemployment rates with the change in crime rates over the last 18 months; and what were the results.

Mr. John Patten: Research has not shown significant associations between changes in recorded crime and changes in unemployment. The article "Unemployment and Crime", in Home Office research bulletin No. 14/82, copies of which are in the Library, reviewed research evidence on the association between unemployment and crime and concluded that little further could be learnt from studies of this topic at aggregate level.

Prison Population (Statistics)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the proportion of the prison population with literacy or numeracy problems.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The prison department does not have information on the proportion of the prison population with serious literacy or numeracy problems.

However, a recent survey showed that of those adult inmates who were tested, 6·2 per cent. were found to have a reading age of eight years or less, and 9·4 per cent. one of 10 years or less. The figures for youth custody centre trainees were 5·9 per cent. and 11·3 per cent., and for detention centre trainees, 5·3 per cent. and 12·8 per cent., respectively.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the proportion of prisoners in each security category.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 March 1988, the most recent date for which information is available, 1·6 per cent. of sentenced adult male prisoners were in security category A, 17 per cent. in category B, 45·1 per cent. in category C and 17 per cent. in category D. The remaining 19·3 per cent. were recorded as uncategorised.

Kirkham Prison

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances prisoners at Kirkham prison are currently prevented from making telephone calls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Payphones have been provided for use by inmates at Kirkham prison since last year. I am not aware of any interruption to this facility.

Ballot Papers

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the Representation of the People Act or the rules thereunder to ensure that the layout of the ballot papers for parliamentary elections comply precisely with the Local Elections (Principal Areas) rules 1986 and the Local Elections (Parish & Communities) Rules 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The form of ballot papers for parliamentary elections is laid down in the Parliamentary Election Rules (schedule 1 to the Representation of the People Act 1983). The Local Election (Principal Areas) Rules 1986 and the Local Elections (Parishes and Communities) Rules 1986 relate only to local elections. We have no reason to believe that these statutory rules are not being complied with, but if my hon. Friend is aware of a particular problem perhaps he would write to me about it.

Marconi (Fire Service Equipment)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received representations on the delays in the delivery of fire service central mobilising systems by Marconi to fire and civil defence authorities.

Mr. John Patten: No. I understand that of the seven fire and civil defence authorities, only London is in the process of installing a Marconi system. We are informed by the authority that, despite some delay, it is anticipated that the system will be operational by the end of the year.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department will monitor the cost of the central mobilising system on order by fire brigades.

Mr. John Patten: No. The provision of brigade mobilising systems, including costs, is the responsibility of fire authorities.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: No facilities are provided for the pre-school age children of staff. For older chidren, we participate in an interdepartmental holiday playscheme in the Bootle area. We have no immediate plans to increase the provision of child care facilities but would be willing to consider proposals put forward by staff or trade union representatives for schemes which would be expected to become self-financing.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force to indicate, from his inspection of the membership records and applications for membership of the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon, how many of the memberships issued which commenced at number 50 to number 92 had been granted to those applicants resident in the Thames Valley police force area; and how many applications resulted in full membership being granted prior to or on 8 December 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that the information is not available.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force naming the source of advice and individuals that gave expert testimony to the chief constable that the ammunition used by the late Michael Ryan was classified as armour piercing;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force naming the source of advice and individuals that gave expert testimony to the chief constable that the rifle possessed and used by the late Michael Ryan was a Kalashnikov.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that he received some technical advice from within the Thames Valley and from the forensic science service.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to what good reason and on what date the late Michael Ryan gave for the purchase of his first two rifles (a) an assault 7·62 mm calibre and (b) an assault 0·30 in calibre and appropriate ammunition, for his introduction to rifle shooting; and on what ranges.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his question on 31 March 1988, at column 692. There is no requirement in the Firearms Act 1968 for the purchaser of a firearm authorised to be held by the police to notify them of its acquisition.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to what special circumstances were taken into consideration when agreeing to accept provisional membership of three months with the Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon, as suitable for the issue to its members of firearms certificates by Thames Valley police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that it is not the practice to issue firearms certificates to applicants holding probationary membership.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many firearms clubs were sent letters from the chief constable signed by Inspector Lambert for or on behalf of the chief constable prior to 19 August 1987 requiring provisional membership of a firearms club for the purpose of obtaining a firearms certificate issued by the Thames Valley police force to be a minimum period of six months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chief constable of Thames Valley is not aware of any such letters.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to what firearms the late Michael Ryan requested authority to possess on his original firearms form 1 application for the grant of a firearms certificate from the chief constable;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to what firearms were subsequently granted by the chief constable to the late Michael Ryan as a result of his original firearms form 1 application for the grant of a firearms certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that Michael Ryan originally applied for and was granted authority to possess one 9mm pistol and one ·38 revolver.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force listing for each calibre of firearm the maximum quantity of ammunition for which the late Michael Ryan requested authority to possess on his applications for variations of his firearms certificate;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force listing for each calibre of firearm the maximum quantity of ammunition at any one time for which the chief constable granted authority for the late Michael Ryan to possess as a result of his original firearms form 1 application for the grant of a firearms certificate;

(3) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force listing for each calibre of firearm the maximum quantity of ammunition at any one time the late Michael Ryan requested authority from the chief constable to possess on his original firearms form 1 application for the grant of a firearms certificate;

(4) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force listing for each calibre of firearm the maximum quantity of ammunition at any one time the chief constable granted authority for the late Michael Ryan to possess as a result of his firearms form 1 application for the variation of his firearms certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that Michael Ryan applied for and was granted authority to possess a maximum at any one time of 500 rounds of 9mm, ·38, ·22, ·32, 7·62mm and ·30 calibre each.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the dates and ranks of police officers carrying out the checks with the local intelligence officers with respect to the applications by the late Michael Ryan for the grant and variations of his firearms certificate;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as the dates and ranks of police officers who acted as local intelligence officers in respect to the applications for the grant and variations of the firearms certificate issued to the late Michael Ryan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that detailed records of the checks made are not available.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley to establish at what time the late Michael Ryan is alleged to have put on his bullet-proof vest on 19 August 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that witnesses' recollections put the time at which Michael Ryan put on his bullet-proof vest as between 12·45 and 12·55pm

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to on what dates police officers, and of what ranks, acting as crime prevention officers, visited the house of the late Michael Ryan for the purpose of inquiries regarding the applications he made in relation to his firearms certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his question on 31 March 1988, at columns 689-90.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to the possessions recovered from the car of the late Michael Ryan, and to where, and by what ranks of officers they were conveyed, giving times.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chief constable of Thames Valley tells me that a police constable and scenes of crime officer recovered from Ryan's car the following items:

(a) A number of spent fragmented bullets
(b) 7 live rounds of ammunition
(c) Empty pistol magazine
(d) Rifle magazine for a ·30 rifle containing 29 rounds
(e) Leather shoulder holster
(f) Shooting magazine (periodical)
(g) Petrol receipts
(h) Instruction leaflet for a shotgun
(i) Street map of Newbury
(j) Body armour waistcoat
(k) Gas mask
(l) Woolen balaclava
(m) Water bottle
(n) Survival kit
(o) Waterproof jacket
(p) Camouflage trousers
(q) Waxed cotton over-trousers
(r) Waterproof poncho
(s) Green haversack
(t) Beige-coloured haversack
(u) Ear defenders

Items (a) to (e) were taken to the forensic science laboratory for examination. The further information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to the ranks of officers who attended to the body of the late Michael Ryan; if he will list the possessions recovered from the body; and to where, and by whom, the body and possessions were conveyed from the school at Hungerford, giving times.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that a detective superintendent, detective inspector and sergeant attended Michael Ryan's body at the John O'Gaunt school. At the school they recovered:

(a) Two 9mm spent cartridge cases.
(b) One pair of handcuffs.
(c) One weapon cleaning kit.
(d) One 9mm misshapen bullet from classroom noticeboard.
(e) One 9mm spent cartridge case under body.
(f) One 9mm Beretta pistol and magazine containing 5 live rounds.
(g) One 9mm live round.

These items were taken by the sergeant to the forensic science laboratory and following examination were retained in police custody.

At the post mortem the following items were taken from the body and retained in police custody:

The additional information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of all questionnaires developed by his Department to assist police officers in their inquiries when visiting applicants for the grant, variation and renewal of firearms certificates and all such amended variations of such questionnaires since 1968 to include drafts and any final copies of those forms recommended by his recent working parties.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No forms have been devised by the Department to assist in firearm certificate applications save for those prescribed in the Firearms Rules 1969.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the reports prepared by the chief constable of Thames Valley police force for his Department, which were sought as a result of the parliamentary question asked by the hon. Member for Londonderry, East about the murders committed by the late Michael Ryan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has anything to add to his answer of 31 March to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East Official Report, columns 693-4, concerning the sale and transfer by the late Michael Ryan of all firearms possessed by him; if he will make a statement as to what further information is held by the chief constable of Thames Valley police; and if he will also provide information on the date of purchase, sale or transfer of all shotguns in the possession of the late Michael Ryan, giving the make, model and quantity of ammunition in each case and the names of all firearms dealers involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have nothing to add to my reply of 31 March concerning the firearms possessed by Michael Ryan. He was granted a shotgun certificate in 1978. The Firearms Act 1968 does not contain a requirement to notify the sale or transfer of a shotgun or shotgun cartridges.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to whether on 19 August 1987 a police constable offered to a police officer the use of his personal and privately owned handgun stored in Hungerford for the purpose of containing the late Michael Ryan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chief constable of Thames Valley tells me that he knows of nothing to substantiate this statement.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to whether the late Michael Ryan practised police pistol and other styles of target shooting with officers of the Thames Valley police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chief constable of Thames Valley has no such information.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to what route Michael Ryan was taking from Hungerford on 19 August 1987 when he killed his first victim; and how far the site of this murder was from the direct route between Ryan's home and the Wiltshire shooting centre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that inquiries have not established Michael Ryan's route from Hungerford to the Savernake forest, the location of the first killing. However, the forest borders the A4 road which would have been the most direct route between his home and the Wiltshire shooting centre.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many Thames Valley police officers, shot at, or were members of the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury, when managed by proprietor George Sturm;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many Thames Valley police officers, shot at, or were members of the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury, when managed by proprietor George Sturm, on the date the late Michael Ryan applied for membership;

(3) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the date on which the late Michael Ryan was granted full membership of the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury, when managed by proprietor George Sturm, stating by whom, after what assessment, and by what procedure;

(4) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the date the late Michael Ryan was granted provisional membership of the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury, when managed by proprietor George Sturm, stating by whom, after what assessment, and by what procedure;

(5) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to the date the late Michael Ryan's application for membership was received by the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury, when managed by proprietor George Sturm, and by whom;

(6) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to what date the late Michael Ryan made written application for membership of the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury, when managed by proprietor George Sturm;

(7) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many entries were made by the late Michael Ryan in the register of users of the range facilities of the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury when managed by proprietor George Sturm;

(8) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force as to how many visits were made, and on what dates, the late Michael Ryan paid visits to the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury when managed by proprietor George Sturm.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley that one of his officers was a member of the club in question. He has no knowledge of Michael Ryan having been a member.

Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions at Newbury magistrates court under the Greenham common military lands byelaws were found invalid on 25 February; how many cases are outstanding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There were two cases before the Crown court at Reading on 25 February. The number of other cases outstanding is not available from records of court proceedings held centrally. The Crown Prosecution Service has now appealed against the decision given on 25 February, and it would not be appropriate for me to make any further statement.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what date the club, run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury when managed by proprietor George Sturm, was first granted Home Office approval; and on what subsequent dates this approval was reviewed and certificates reissued or renewed;

(2) if he will (a) list and (b) place in the Library copies of all relevant documents relating to inquiries made and completed by the Home Office and Thames Valley or other police forces into the applications by the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury when managed by proprietor George Sturm, for consideration for the issue, amendment, addition to, or renewal of, the Home Office approval certificates;

(3) if he will (a) list and (b) place in the Library a copy of all documents submitted in the course of the applications by the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury when managed by proprietor George Sturm, to the police or the Home Office for the issue, amendment, addition to, or renewal of the Home Office approval certificates;

(4) if he will place in the Library a copy of the original Home Office approval certificate for the club run by the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company based in Membury when managed by proprietor George Sturm, and any subsequent amendments or additions to, and renewals of it.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The club was approved for the use of small and full-bore rifles and pistols on 30 April 1986. The approval was withdrawn on 27 May 1987 in the light of information from the Thames Valley police that the club had ceased to operate.

It is not the practice to place such documents in the Library.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force to establish whether or not the chief constable placed before the coroner, for his consideration prior to or during the inquest into events on 19 August 1987 involving the late Michael Ryan, statements and copy documents provided by the Wiltshire shooting centre and its proprietors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that statements and copy documents provided by the Wiltshire shooting centre and its proprietors were placed before the coroner prior to the inquest.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force listing all the firearms clubs that his inquiries have revealed the late Michael Ryan either visited, applied to join, or joined;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police force listing all the firearms ranges that his inquiries have revealed the late Michael Ryan visited to shoot.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that Michael Ryan is not known to have visited firearms clubs other than the two of which he was a member.

Firearms Certificate (Gwent)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Londonderry of 13 April, what is his assessment of the implications for policy on the efficiency of police procedures of the failure to draw the letter, reference MLB/JD, dated 19 January 1985, to the attention of Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Nil.

Crime Detection

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance has been issued to chief officers of police about the practice of recording crimes as detected following visits to persons serving custodial sentences.

Mr. Hurd: Copies of the guidance circulated to all chief officers by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary have today been placed in the Library.

Lunar House, Croydon

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of unopened letters on 21 March at Lunar house, Croydon; and of those how many were (a) applications for citizenship and (b) applications for variation of leave.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 18 April 1988]: On 21 March, 54,700 applications for citizenship were unopened and a further 41,700 applications for citizenship were opened but not acknowledged; 40,400 other items of mail, principally relating to variations of leave, were unopened. The position has since been further substantially improved, as set out in my reply, on 19 April, at column 410, to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) about the position as at 11 April.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Derelict and Unused Land

73. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement as to what steps are being taken to sell off vacant, dormant and derelict land in the ownership of Government Departments.

Mr. Major: Government Departments are encouraged to list all their surplus land on the land registers. Since the land registers were set up in 1981, over 42 per cent. of Crown land listed has been sold or brought back into use. Departments assess their land holding operational requirements regularly, and discuss plans for disposals with the Treasury.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Brooke: No child care provision is currently provided by my Department. Any provision which was set up in the next five years would have to be self-financing.

Finance Ministers Meeting

Mr. Sackville: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meetings of Finance Ministers in Washington.

Mr. Lawson: A number of meetings of Finance Ministers took place in Washington last week.

There was useful progress on a range of issues. The major industrial countries reaffirmed their commitment to co-ordinate economic policies and promote greater exchange rate stability.

The problems of the poorest, most heavily indebted countries, especially in sub-Saharan Africa were again highlighted. I welcome in particular the establishment of the enhanced structural adjustment facility (the ESAF) where the United Kingdom has pledged the largest single contribution to the interest rate subsidy on ESAF lending; and the World Bank's special programme of assistance for sub-Saharan Africa. Progress has also been made on the United Kingdom's own initiative to provide debt relief to the poorest countries through the Paris Club, and I am continuing to work to secure agreement on interest rate reductions on Paris Club reschedulings.

There was general agreement that the continuing problems of highly indebted middle-income countries are best dealt with by continuation of the present approach and by further exploring market-related solutions, including extensions of the "menu" of options.

Copies of the communiques issued and of my statements to the meetings have been deposited in the House of Commons Library.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will announce the results of ethnic monitoring of recruitment by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Luce: The Civil Service Commissioners' annual report, published today, reports on the commission's recruitment activities in the calendar year ending 31 December 1987. It also sets out and reviews the results of the first year of their ethnic monitoring. A copy of the annual report and of two research studies relating to the work on ethnic monitoring is available in the Libraries of Parliament.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service on what basis the categories of human groups listed on the official forms for the purposes of ethnic monitoring of Civil Servants were chosen.

Mr. Luce: The ethnic origin categories used in the Civil Service monitoring surveys were based on advice from the Commission for Racial Equality and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and on the results of a pilot survey in Leeds in 1982.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Primary and Secondary Pupils

Ms. Armstrong To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number and proportion of primary and secondary pupils in classes of over 30 pupils in each local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The number and proportion of pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools in classes of over 30 pupils in each local education authority in England in January 1987 is given in the table. The analyses relate to classes taught by one teacher at a selected time on the day of the census count in January and do not necessarily represent the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

Number and proportion of pupils in one teacher classes of over 30 pupils January 1987

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not currently provide child care provision for employees' children. There are no firm proposals for making such provision during the next five years, although the possibility of providing creche facilities for the Department's Darlington office is under consideration.

Computing (Women Students)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to counter the decline in the numbers of women studying computing at universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: The overall number of women starting computing courses at universities and polytechnics has increased over the past five years.

The figures are:

Female enrolments on computing courses

	Polytechnics[1] in England (full-time equivalent)	Universities[2] in the United Kingdom (full-time)
1982	496	412
1983	589	381
1984	557	342
1985	688	363
1986	785	367

[1] All advanced courses in computing.
[2] Full-time courses for first degrees or diplomas.

Education Reform

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish his proposals for the programme of education support grants in 1989-90.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have written to the local authority associations proposing expenditure of £125·5 million on the programme next year. Some £48·5 million of this will be for the continuing support of projects begun in earlier years, and £77 million will be for new and extended activities. The purposes for which I propose to pay grant are set out in the table. My main priority in drawing up these proposals has been to reflect the priorities of the Education Reform Bill now before Parliament. £35 million of the new expenditure would be devoted to activities relating to financial delegation, including over £5 million for training governors in schools and colleges. I propose to make some £30 million of support available in areas relating to the introduction of the national curriculum, including £10 million for information technology equipment as well as almost £9 million earmarked for science and English.

I also intend to make £9 million available for adult literacy and educational guidance programmes, open learning and the training of youth leaders for the inner cities. There will be further funding for advanced computer-aided engineering equipment.

I believe that this programme will help local education authorities introduce the national curriculum and the wide-ranging changes in the management of schools and colleges proposed in the Education Reform Bill.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

El Salvador

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his assessment of the level of human rights abuses in El Salvador including those by both Government and non-Government agencies.

Mr. Eggar: We share the view of the United Nations Special Representative in his latest report that the human rights situation in El Salvador has continued to improve, although there is still room for further progress. We are concerned about the abuses noted by the Special Representative on the part of the guerrillas, including indiscriminate use of land mines, summary executions and kidnappings.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest assessment of the presence of oil reserves near the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: Studies undertaken by companies in the petroleum industry have been inconclusive.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has no child care provision at present, either for the pre-school age group or for those aged five and over.

There is a proposal to provide child care facilities for the pre-school age group and/or a holiday play scheme. Both would be user-funded.

Government Communications Bureau

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the role and function of the Government Communications Bureau; when it was created; what has been its annual budget for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government Communications Bureau was founded shortly after world war II. It is a non-departmental body advising on international communications systems principally for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Ministry of Defence. It does not have a separate budget.

United Nations Council for Namibia

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any information concerning the total cost of the United Nations Council for Namibia conference held in Istanbul on 21 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline any representations which he has made to the United Nations concerning the activities of the United Nations Council for Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made no representations about the United Nations Council for Namibia. However, at the last session of the General Assembly we made it plain that we remained concerned at the continued financial extravagance of some of the activities of the Council for Namibia.

Intermediate Nuclear Forces Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any Soviet inspectors have yet been permitted access to the United States cruise missile sites at Royal Air Force Molesworth and Royal Air Force Greenham Common for the purposes of verification under the intermediate nuclear forces treaty.

Mr. Mellor: No.

South Africa (Submarines)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom is party to (a) any United Nations agreement or (b) European Economic Community agreement prohibiting the provision of blueprints, materials or hardware for submarines to the Republic of South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We adhere strictly to

(a) Security Council resolution 418 of 1977, which embodies the United Nations arms embargo against South Africa; and

(b) the agreement reached by Foreign Ministers of the European Community in September 1985 to refuse to co-operate with South Africa in the military sphere and on a rigorously controlled embargo on exports of arms to that country.

We would therefore not permit British companies to supply blueprints, materials or hardware for submarines to South Africa.

Russia—PLO Meeting

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Moscow regarding the recent meeting between Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Yasser Arafat; and whether the ambassador has been able to substantiate, through contact with the Soviet Foreign Ministry, the report in Tass that Mr. Gorbachev asked the Palestine Liberation Organisation to recognise the state of Israel.

Mr. Mellor: It is not clear whether the welcome remarks which Mr. Gorbachev is reported as having made concerning recognition of the state of Israel were, in fact, directed at the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Jack Lewis-Walker

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by his Department to the Government of Zimbabwe about the imprisonment without trail of Mr. Jack Lewis-Walker, about whom the hon. Member for Macclesfield has written to him; and on what date he expects to be able to announce that Mr. Lewis-Walker has been released.

Mr. Eggar: I have not yet received any letter from my hon. Friend on this subject, although I received letters from other hon. Members with constituency interests.

The British high commission at Harare is in touch with the authorities in Zimbabwe and has been granted consular access to Mr. Lewis-Walker, who is detained under the emergency powers regulations.

We cannot speculate when Mr. Lewis-Walker may be released. This is a matter for the Zimbabwe authorities. The British high commission has made formal representations to try to secure his release on the basis that this has been recommended by the review tribunal.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS Staff

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numerised and percentage increases or decreases in the following categories of National Health Service hospital service manpower since 1973-74 (a) nursery and midwifery, (b) ancillary, (c) medical and dental and (d) administrative and clerical.

Mr. Newton: Such information as is available for England is shown in the tables.

Staffing figures have been given (a) for all hospital and community staff and (b) for hospital nursing and midwifery staff and medical and dental staff. (These are the only two staff groups that can be split between those working in the community and in hospitals).

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent by Her Majesty's Government in each year since 1980 (a) directly and (b) through grants to non-Government organisations, on education measures to reduce solvent abuse.

Mrs. Currie: The Government have directly spent the following sums on specific education and information measures designed to inform young people, parents, professional workers and retailers about the problems of solvent misuse.

	Direct Expenditure £	Via Voluntary Agencies £
1980-81	—	—
1981-82	—	1,100

Total £183,900

The Government have also funded drug education co-ordinators in every local education authority, whose work has included activities aimed at preventing solvent misuse; have funded the Health Education Authority which (as the Health Education Council) produced a leaflet on solvent misuse; and have invested in a major expansion of drug misuse services, some of which offer help to solvent misusers.

NHS Property (Kettering)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all National Health Service property within the Kettering district health authority area, stating acreage and current open market valuation.

Mrs. Currie: A list of NHS property, and acreage, within Kettering district health authority is as follows. Information on the current open market valuation is not readily available and to obtain it would involve disproportionate cost. Disclosure of the open market value may also be prejudicial to any future sale of this property.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate his latest estimates of the numbers of persons gaining and losing as a result of social security changes coming into effect in April, in the following categories (a) those affected by the abolition of housing benefit supplement, (b) those affected by the reductions in housing benefit related to amenity charges paid to landlords and (c) those affected by the increase in housing benefit non-dependant deductions.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that data are not available in the form requested. Available information is contained in "The Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits." These tables allow for the effect of the abolition of housing benefit supplement, but not for the change to the structure of non-dependant deductions. The tables make no allowances for changes to the support received under the former housing benefit scheme by those people on supplementary benefit who were paying for their fuel with their rent—around 90,000 claimants. This help is being phased out over the next five years.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage loss in income in (a) Burnley and (b) Pendle due to housing benefit reductions of those earning (i) £60 per week, (ii) £80 per week and (iii) £150 per week.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the local government housing authorities which failed to convert their housing benefit regulations in line with the Social Security Act 1986 by the designated time;

(2) if he will investigate those housing authorities which failed to convert their housing benefit regulations in line with the Social Security Act 1986 by the designated time and deposit his findings in the Library.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the local authority housing departments which have failed to convert all their housing benefit claimants' cases from the old system to the new, as defined by the Social Security Act 1986, by the due date of 4 April; and what percentage of claimants for each authority had not been notified of their precise entitlements by that date.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which local authorities had housing benefit systems in operation in time for the start of the new housing benefit scheme on 1 April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Cochlea Implants

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of a cochlea implant; how many such operations have been performed under the National Health Service in the most recent 12-month period; what steps have been taken to evaluate the effectiveness of the operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Implantation of cochlea stimulation devices is undertaken at University College hospital, London, from non-National Health Service funds and with support from the National Institute of the Deaf. There are also research programmes at other National Health Service hospitals. Cochlea implants are still at a research and development stage and it is for health authorities to decide whether and when to make them generally available, taking into account medical advice as to benefits for patients and results of research and evaluation. Cost estimates vary according to the type of device from about £6,000 to £10,000 per patient.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any medical research relating to AIDS being undertaken on chimpanzees is financed by the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Under its fourth medical and health research programme the European Community contributes to the funding of a breeding colony of chimpanzees in the Netherlands. It is proposed that 20 animals should be used in AIDS research to the end of 1991.

Social Security Appeals (Carlisle)

Mr. Marlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many social security appeals were made by claimants who live in Carlisle city in the years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; and what percentage of these claimants were represented during the appeals.

Mr. Portillo: The table gives the available information. The national administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region and the figures relate to the north-western region, which includes Carlisle city. Equivalent information is not available prior to April 1984.

Social security appeal tribunal statistics are now published annually in "Social Security Statistics". The 1986 edition contains information on social security tribunal statistics from April 1984 to December 1986 while the 1987 edition contains information from January 1986 to December 1986.

Maternity Grants

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women claimed maternity grants in the last year of availability in Blyth Valley; and what is his best estimate of the number of women who will receive social fund payments for maternity in the first year of availability.

Mr. Portillo: The figures requested (for Blyth local office area) are as follows:

	Number
Maternity grant claims (15 April 1986-13 April 1987):	1,281
Social fund maternity payments (6 April 1987-8 April 1988):	353

Death Grants

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many death grants were claimed in Blyth Valley last year; and how many were awarded.

Mr. Portillo: Death grants ceased with the introduction of the social fund funeral payments in April 1987.

During the last year of availability (9 April 1986 to 6 April 1987) 1,094 death grants were claimed at Blyth local office. Figures on the number of payments made are not available.

In the first year of operation (7 April 1987 to 8 April 1988) 97 claims to social fund funeral payments resulted in 59 payments.

Free School Meals

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which pupils will be entitled to free school meals in the Northumberland education authority currently on supplementary benefit; and what is his estimate of the number of pupils on the new family credit scheme and income support who will be entitled to free meals.

Mr. Portillo: In October 1987, (the latest date for which information is available) there were 5,863 children receiving free school meals in the Northumberland education authority area on account of their family's receipt of supplementary benefit. We estimate that a similar number are now entitled on account of receipt of income support. Children from families in receipt of family credit are not entitled to free school meals. Instead, provision is made in cash by including an additional amount of £2·55 in the child credit rates for each child for each week of the year.

Haringey Health Authority

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of hospital beds available in the Haringey health authority area on the latest available date, and for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The requested information is given in the table.

Industrial Death Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his Department's decision to withdraw the industrial death benefit of those widows receiving it whose husbands died before 11 April.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) and for Paisley, South (Mr. Buchan) on 18 April 1988 at columns 344-45.

Social Fund

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the formula which determined the allocation of social fund grants and loans to local offices, what was the expenditure on single payments for each office in the period used for assessment under the formula; what that figure is as a percentage of the national total; and what the social fund loan and grants allocations to each office for 1988-89 were as a percentage of the national total.

Mr. Scott: A note explaining the basis of the allocation of the social fund budgets for 1988-89 has been in the Library since December. For information on single payment expenditure for the 32-week period ending 7 April 1987, I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 18 February at column 701. Social fund allocations were announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November 1987 at columns 774-81.

Abortion

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of abortions, under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, in the Sheffield health authority area for each of the last seven years for which figures are available; how many of these abortions were performed on ground 4 where there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped; and how many of these abortions were performed on ground 5 to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received from the Disablement Income Group with reference to the decision not to disregard savings of mobility allowance for the purchase of a car in evaluating capital and entitlement to income support; when they were received; what action has been taken; what reply he is sending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Peter Large of the Disablement Income Group wrote to me on 27 February on this subject. I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received from the joint committee on mobility for the disabled with reference to the decision not to disregard savings of mobility allowance for the purchase of a car in evaluating capital and entitlement to income support; when they were received; what action has been taken; what reply he is sending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No representation has been received from the joint committee on mobility for the disabled.

THE ARTS

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what child care provision his Office provides for pre-school age children of the Office's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Luce: At present no child care provision is provided by the Office of Arts and Libraries for employees' children.

There are no plans to introduce such facilities in the next five years.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) whether he has figures updated from the 1980 Department of Education and Science review of the Victoria and Albert museum conservation department for (a) the proportion of 16th to 20th century miniatures which now require conservation; (b) how many 16th to 20th century miniatures now require major treatment; (c) how many objects in the prints and drawings departments now require urgent treatment and (d) how many items in the reserve collection of tapestries are now decaying;

(2) what have been the receipts from the sale of Army objects in the collections of (a) the British museum and (b) the Victoria and Albert museums in each of the past 10 years;

(3) whether the Clore gallery at the Tate gallery has a computerised alarm system; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what he estimates would be the cost of introducing computerised alarm systems at (a) the Tate gallery and (b) the Victoria and Albert museums;

(5) whether the collections in (a) the Tate gallery, (b) the British museum and (c) the Victoria and Albert museum are insured; and if he will make a statement;

(6) whether, pursuant to paragraphs 4.17 of the National Audit Office report "The Management of English Museums", he will name the collection of manuscripts in the Victoria and Albert museum's national art library which, according to that report, is in a distressing condition with widespread deterioration of paper and bindings; and what is its estimated value;

(7) whether he will list the off-site storage locations of (a) the British museum and (b) the Victoria and Albert museum and indicate (i) which are devoted solely to storage and (ii) the storage space of each in square metres;

(8) what estimates he has of the cost of installing (a) temperature controls, (b) humidity controls and (c) an air filteration system for the storage of the British museum's prints and drawings department;

(9) how many duplicates of objects are in the collections of (a) the British museum and (b) the Victoria and Albert museum;

(10) how many objects in the collections of (a) the British museum (b) the Victoria and Albert museum have become useless for the purposes of the collection over the past 10 years by reason of (a) damage, (b) deterioration or (c) infestation;

(11) whether, pursuant to paragraphs 2-4 of the National Audit Office report, "The Management of National Museums" he will list the potential acquisitions which have been rejected by (a) the Tate gallery, (b) the British museum and (c) the Victoria and Albert museum in each of the last five years on the grounds of consequential resource costs;

(12) how many objects in the collection of (a) the British museum and (b) the Victoria and Albert museum have been (i) given away, (ii) sold or (iii) transferred to other museums and galleries, over the past 10 years; and whether he will list all such objects whose value is greater than £1,000;

(13) how many professional and qualified staff were employed in conservation at (a) the Tate gallery, (b) the British museum and (c) the Victoria and Albert museum in (i) 1977 and (ii) 1987;

(15) how many objects are in the collection of (a) the British museum and (b) the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce: I shall write to the hon. Member and will place copies of my letter in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Tribunals (Appeals)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many appeals to industrial tribunals were made by workers living in the city of Carlisle in the years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; and what percentage of those workers were represented during the tribunal hearings.

Mr. Nicholls: The relevant statistics for residents within the Carlisle postal district are as follows:

	Number of complaints heard by industrial tribunals	Per cent of applicants represented at hearings
1983	21	48
1984	19	58
1985	68	99
1986	8	75
1987	15	80

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to require claims for unfair dismissal to be made in writing to industrial tribunals and to be made available to the employers against whom complaint is made before the hearing.

Mr. Nicholls: The industrial tribunal rules of procedure already require this to be done.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to require claimants who fail in their applications to industrial tribunals for unfair dismissal to bear their own costs.

Mr. Nicholls: Parties to unfair dismissal cases generally bear their own costs, though under their rules of procedure industrial tribunals may order a party who has acted frivolously, vexatiously or otherwise unreasonably to pay the costs of the other party.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the actual and percentage changes in employment for the years 1977 and 1987 were in (i) Yorkshire and Humberside and (ii) Don Valley constituency in the following main industry groups: (a) mining, (b) manufacturing, (c) construction, (d) distribution and leisure, (e) financial services and (f) public and other services.

Mr. Lee: The available information is as follows:

Employees in Employment in Yorkshire and Humberside Region Changes in the levels of employment between June 1977 and June 1987

	Numbers	Percentages
Manufacturing	−273,000	−37·9
Construction	−16,000	−15·2
Wholesale distribution, hotels and catering	56,000	34·6
Retail distribution	−6,000	−3·4
Banking, insurance and finance	57,000	64·0
Public administration and defence	−1,000	−0·8
Education, health and other services	59,000	17·4

The available employee estimates for parliamentary constituencies are from censuses of employment taken in September 1981 and September 1984. An industry breakdown is not available for the earlier year, but, overall, the estimated number of employees in employment in the Don Valley constituency showed a reduction of 2,700, or 12 per cent., between the two census dates.

Mr. Tony Lloyd To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each standard region the most recent figures which are available showing the annual change in (i) the number of employees in employment and (ii) the number of full-time equivalent employees in employment.

Mr. Lee: There is insufficient detail in the quarterly employment estimates to form the basis of a calculation of a full-time equivalent series. The available information is as follows:

Employees in employment
Changes in the levels of employment between December 1986 and December 1987

The labour force survey provides information on a different basis from which can be calculated the person hours usually worked by employees. The changes between spring 1986 and spring 1987 are shown in the following table.

Increase between spring 1986 and spring 1987 in person hours usually worked by employees

	Thousand person hours per week	Per cent.

Mr. Mans To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the rate of change in unemployment levels in the last 12 months in the north-west.

Mr. Lee: On 10 March 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the north-west region, seasonally adjusted and excluding school leavers was 347,800, a fall of 15·8 per cent. since March 1987.

Termination of Employment

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to require employers to provide dismissed employees with reasons in writing for the termination of their employment.

Mr. Nicholls: Section 53 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 gives an employee the right, subject to certain qualifying conditions, to be provided with a written statement giving particulars of the reasons for dismissal.

Race and Sex Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will institute an inquiry to seek detailed information on the full extent of race and sex monitoring in the workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: No. To institute such an inquiry would have considerable resource implications and impose additional burdens on employers.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage of the 374 major private sector employers visited by the Department of Employment's race relations advisory service (a) have introduced ethnic monitoring and (b) are actively considering the introduction of ethnic monitoring; and if he will place a list of such employers in the Library.

Mr. Nicholls: Of the 374 major private sector employers visited in the period April 1985 to December 1987, 79 had introduced ethnic monitoring and 47 were actively considering the introduction of ethnic monitoring. I cannot place a list of these employers in the Library for the reasons I gave to the hon. Member in my reply of 18 April 1988, at column 319.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will issue a circular to major employers in the private sector, requesting them to comply with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, in respect of monitoring and positive action.

Mr. Nicholls: An initiative of this kind would be more appropriate for the commissions to undertake. The Government encourage the adoption of the recommendations in the CRE and EOC codes of practice, including those relating to monitoring and positive action. This Department's race relations employment advisory service is at the present time giving particular publicity to the positive action provisions within the Race Relations Act and is encouraging employers to use them whenever appropriate. It will also be supporting the CRE's forthcoming campaign to promote its code of practice.

Race and Sex Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) by whom the research project will shortly be commissioned to investigate the benefits that accrue from the introduction of ethnic monitoring systems by employers; by whom the project will be carried out; how long the project will take; how much it will cost; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will commission a research project to investigate the benefits that accrue from the introduction of sex monitoring systems by employers.

Mr. Nicholls: The research project to investigate the benefits of ethnic monitoring systems will be commissioned by my Department. It will be carried out by an independent university-based research team, will take one year, and will cost up to £40,000

The research project to investigate the benefits of ethnic monitoring should also throw some light on those that accrue from sex monitoring. It would therefore be premature to consider further research on sex monitoring until the current project has been reported.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Lee: In the Department of Employment group a care-parent scheme operates for staff with children under five years old at the Health and Safety Executive headquarters in Bootle. Holiday play schemes, for employees' children aged five years and over, operate in the Department of Employment's headquarters at Runcorn, the Manpower Services Commission headquarters at Sheffield and the Health and Safety Executive headquarters in London. Additionally, we participate in two interdepartmental holiday play schemes in Bootle and Edinburgh. Several initiatives are under consideration or are proposed. These include the provision of creche facilities, at the Department of Employment in Runcorn and at the Health and Safety Executive in Bootle; also a care-parent scheme for Manpower Services Commission staff at Sheffield and an interdepartmental holiday play scheme in London (SW1). As regards plans to increase provision in the next five years, the Department will continue to consider sympathetically proposals for day care and holiday play schemes and, where possible, will provide practical help where there is evidence of sufficient demand to make it financially viable. The Department may be able to offer initial financial support to new daycare schemes but they must be viable without a continuing subsidy.

Former Chemical Factory, Ilford

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Inspectorate last visited the site of a former chemical factory in Uphall road, Ilford; what were the results of its monitoring ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive last visited this site on 1st March 1988 to meet the prospective developers of the site and discuss their plans for development. No monitoring of the site was carried out by the Health and Safety Executive during the visit.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now reply to the letter sent to him on 3 February by the hon. Member for Gower in relation to a constituent residing in Llanmadoc, Gower.

Mr. Lee: I have now written to the hon. Member.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Potatoes

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the market support prices for potatoes to apply in Northern Ireland for the 1988-89 crop year beginning on 1 July have been determined; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Yes, following consultation with the Ulster Farmers Union it has been decided that the support price for the 1988 ware potato crop should remain at the level which applied to the 1987 crop, namely £46 per tonne. Any support operation will be limited to a maximum of 60,000 tonnes and as previously announced the target area for Northern Ireland planting in 1988 is 12,500 hectares.

I believe that these arrangements will provide growers with a reasonable degree of assistance should it be necessary to introduce potato market support measures. I would, however, hope that support measures will not be necessary and I look to producers to make a positive contribution to market equilibrium by avoiding over-planting.

China (Trade Delegation)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the Northern Ireland trade delegation to China.

Mr. Viggers [holding reply 14 April 1988]: I visited China from 20-31 March with a trade delegation comprising representatives of eight Northern Ireland companies. The delegation, which was organised and supported by the Industrial Development Board, visited Shanghai, Tianjin and Beijing.

The companies representatives visited a large number of potential customers and orders have been secured as a result of contacts made. I also met a number of organisations interested in investing outside China and these discussions have already led to a follow-up visit by a major Chinese clothing manufacturer to Northern Ireland.

School Assemblies

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy towards the holding during school assemblies, of public signings of pledges as part of campaigns organised by bodies which do not recognise or support the role of the security forces in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding reply 15 April 1988]: This is primarily a matter for school authorities operating within existing legislation. I am not aware of any campaign in schools being organised by bodies opposed to the security forces.

SCOTLAND

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the privatisation of the electricity industry in Scotland will require any minimum level of electricity generation by non-nuclear plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Government have no such proposals in mind.

Low-alcohol Lager

Mr. Michael Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to prevent licensed grocers from selling low-alcohol lager to children under 18 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The sale of any beverage which in strength exceeds 1·2 per cent. of ethyl alcohol to children under the age of 18 years is an offence under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976. Anyone possessing evidence of such an offence should bring the matter to the attention of the police.

Child Care

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is being given by him to the EEC resolution on child care.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the resolution on child care infrastructures adopted by the European Parliament at its session on 10 March 1986 and published subsequently in the Official Journal of the European Communities. Such resolutions are not binding on member states.

Scottish Ferry Companies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of subsidy paid to the Scottish ferry companies expressed per head of the population in the islands for the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures requested are as follows:

1983-84	95·41
1984-85	100·91
1985-86	106·42
1986-87	102·75
1987-88	[1]90·82

[1] Estimate.

The subsidies are the deficit subsidies paid to Caledonian MacBrayne and the Orkney Islands Shipping Company (OISC) and the fare subsidies payments made to P and O Ferries. Payments to OISC ended in 1986-87 when responsibility for support was transferred to the Orkney Islands council. This figure was £1·0 million in the final year. The population figures are from the 1981 census for Orkney, Shetland, the Outer and Inner Hebrides and islands in the Clyde.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the rate of return to be obtained by the South of Scotland electricity board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board currently and after completion of the Torness power station.

Mr. Lang: In 1986-87, the latest year for which figures were available, the current cost rate of return on net assets employed achieved jointly by the Scottish electricity boards was 2·8 per cent. The agreed financial target for 1987-88 is 2·7 per cent. and for 1988-89 is 2·8 per cent. The rate of return for the period beyond 1988-89 is still to be discussed.

Torness power station is expected to start supplying the grid in the course of this year and should be fully commissioned by the early 1990s.

Courts Administration

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been employed by the Scottish courts administration in the last five years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of staff in terms of full-time equivalents employed by the Scottish courts administration at 1 April in each of the last five years was as follows:

Year	Number
1 April 1984	880
1 April 1985	882½
1 April 1986	868½
1 April 1987	869
1 April 1988	872½

District Courts

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by court the number of criminal cases dealt with in the district courts in Scotland in the last five years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on Monday 18 January 1988, at column 518.

Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the establishment of the Crown Office and procurator fiscal service in Scotland; and how many people have been employed in each of the last five years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of staff who are and have been employed in the Crown Office and procurator fiscal service, on 1 April each year, are as follows:

Year	Staff
1988	1,007
1987	981
1986	956
1985	968
1984	942
1983	927

Air Pollution

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the dangers that can be caused by the discharge of an excessive level of sulphur dioxide into the atmosphere over Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Emissions of sulphur dioxide from Scottish sources amount to less than 5 per cent. of United Kingdom emissions. There is no evidence that current levels of SO_2 in the atmosphere are having any direct effect on human, animal or plant health, but SO_2 emissions can contribute to the acidification of freshwaters. A considerable monitoring and research programme, with substantial Government funding, is being undertaken in Scotland to assess the levels and effects of deposition.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the dangers that can be caused by the discharge of an excessive level of heavy metals into the atmosphere over Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no evidence that current levels of heavy metals discharged into the atmosphere in Scotland are having any effect on human, animal, fish or plant health.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment is made by his Department of the level of heavy metals discharged into the atmosphere over Scotland annually from the burning of fossil fuels by electricity generating stations in England and Wales; what are the levels for the remaining discharge of heavy metals; and what is treated as a safe level.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Assessments of the concentrations of heavy metals in the atmosphere in Scotland are carried out on behalf of the Scottish Development Department by the Warren Spring laboratory. It would be very difficult at present to establish the proportion arising from power stations in England and Wales, but it is likely to be negligible.

The concentrations of lead recorded in Scotland have been within the limit value set by the EC directive for lead in air. No generally accepted concentration is set for other elements, but the levels recorded in Scotland have been below mean levels normally recorded in urban atmospheres in the United Kingdom.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measurements are made by his Department to assess the emissions of sulphur dioxide into the atmosphere in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Measurements of the levels of sulphur dioxide in the atmosphere are not made as a matter of routine by the Scottish Development Department, but are undertaken as part of a survey organised on a national basis under the auspices of the Warren Spring laboratory of the Department of Trade and Industry and funded by the Department of the Environment.

Ski Facilities

Sir Russell Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has given further consideration to the proposals for a ski facility at Aonach Mor in Fort William; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I understand that new proposals for the ski development at Aonach Mor near Fort William are under discussion between the developers and the public bodies involved. The proposals have not yet been submitted to the Industry Department for Scotland.

Sir Russell Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received any proposals for the extension of the Glencoe ski facility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am not aware of any plans for extending the Glencoe ski facility at present. New facilities were opened for the 1987-88 season with Government financial assistance from the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Scottish Sports Council.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Purity

17. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on progress made towards full implementation of the European Economic Community directives on drinking water and bathing water.

Mr. Ridley: Most public water supplies for which derogations have been sought from the European Commission are expected to comply with the EC drinking water directive by 1990. In addition, I have asked water undertakers in England to review their investment programmes in the light of my statement of 2 December 1987 about a revised interpretation of this directive.

All significant seaside resorts are included within the scope of the bathing water directive. More than half the bathing waters comply with the directive's standards and major improvement schemes are in hand or planned to bring the others up to these standards.

Planning Laws

18. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking legislation to reform the planning laws.

Mr. Waldegrave: I receive frequent representations asking for planning legislation either to be tightened or to be relaxed.

Rating Reform

19. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of (a) Age Concern, (b) the Child Poverty Action Group, (c) the Low Pay Unit, (d) the National Council for Voluntary Organisations, and (e) the British Council of Churches to discuss the effects of the poll tax; and what was discussed.

Mr. Chope: I have not had a request for a meeting to discuss the community charge from any of these bodies.

23. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of electors in the boroughs of Stockton-on-Tees and Middlesbrough currently pay domestic rates; and what forecast he has of the proportion that will pay the community charge.

Mr. Chope: About half the electors in Middlesbrough and Stockton-on-Tees pay rates, whereas virtually all electors will pay the community charge.

36. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of gainers and losers from the proposed poll tax in Lewisham.

Mr. Howard: The estimates of gainers and losers from the introduction of the community charge which I published on 13 Janaury were produced using data from the family expenditure survey. Projections for individual local authority areas are not possible because of the limitations of the sample survey data.

40. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people and how many organisations have made representations to him in favour of the community charge since June 1987.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion).

47. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the average community charge that would be levied in 1988-89 if the Local Government Finance Bill were in force.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 28 March at column 312.

65. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of people who will be exempt from paying any community charge under the proposals in the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Howard: I estimate that about ½ million people will be exempt from the community charge.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps, following the introduction of the community charge, to ensure that landlords allow a reduction in rents equivalent to the amount of community charge which the tenant will thereafter have to pay personally.

Mr. Howard: Many tenants already pay rent exclusive of rates, and pay their rates direct to the local authority. Tenants with registered rents, which are always fixed exclusive of rates, will no longer be liable for any separate rates contribution to their landlord when the community charge is introduced. For tenancies granted before the current Housing Bill becomes law, tenants who do not have a registered rent, and who do not know what the rates element of their rent may be, can if necessary at any time register a rent to establish this.

Where a rent assessment committee arbitrates on market rents for new-style assured and shorthold tenancies granted after the Housing Bill becomes law, but before domestic rates are abolished, these rents will also be exclusive of rates. For other assured tenancies granted before the introduction of the community charge, where the tenant has not been paying rates direct to the local authority, it will be for the parties to negotiate a reduction in the rent to reflect the abolition of rates. We shall be issuing advice to tenants on this. We see no need for further measures.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost to local authorities of developing computer systems for the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: This is one of the aspects of a study now being undertaken by Price Waterhouse on which a report is expected next month.

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the increase in the maximum net weekly incomes that would qualify for community charge rebates by using a taper of 15 per cent. instead of a taper of 20 per cent. in calculating rebate entitlement.

Mr. Howard: The increase in maximum net weekly incomes that would qualify for community charge rebates by using a taper of 15 per cent. instead of a taper of 20 per cent. would vary according to circumstances of the claimant and the level of the community charge.

I have today placed in the Library a table showing the increase over a range of community charges, for a single person aged 18-24, a couple with two children under 11, and a pensioner couple aged 60-79.

So, for example, on the basis of a taper of 15 per cent., a couple with two children aged under 11, where the community charge is £224 would qualify for a rebate with a net weekly income of up to £131·77. In gross terms this would be approximately £7,700 per annum or nearly three quarters of the national average wage.

National Rivers Authority

20. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be in a position to announce the appointment of the chairman of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Moynihan: Next year. However, I hope shortly to make an announcement about the chairmanship of the National Rivers Authority Advisory Committee.

Waste Disposal Sites

21. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about safety arrangements for waste disposal sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received my hon. Friend's letter of 22 March about building houses on or near old waste disposal sites.

Following a letter in December last to all waste disposal authorities, my Department is currently in the process of establishing the numbers of sites capable of generating methane, and will publish later this year a waste management paper on how to deal with the problem.

Housing (South of England)

22. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further plans he has for increasing the amount of land available for housing in the south of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has asked the south east regional planning conference to consider the implications for housing requirements in the south-east of the new population and household projections. In light of SERPLAN's advice, we shall consider the need for revised regional guidance to county planning authorities on the appropriate scale and distribution of housing provision in county structure plans.

Derelict and Unused Land

24. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reviews his Department is undertaking with regard to the release of derelict, vacant, dormant, underutilised and unused land in public ownership.

Mr. Ridley: My Department keeps under constant review the extent of unused and underused land owned by public bodies that is entered on the land registers; and, where necessary, statutory procedures to force disposal are initiated.

25. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether details of vacant, dormant, derelict and underutilised land in Crown ownership are included in the register of vacant land held in his Department.

35. Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that details of vacant, dormant, derelict and underutilised land in Crown ownership to be included in the register of vacant land held in his Department.

52. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now arrange for details of vacant, derelict and underutilised land in Crown ownership to be included in the register of vacant land held by his Department.

Mr. Ridley: Details of unused and underused land in Crown ownership are included in the registers of such land compiled and maintained under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

29. Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of under one acre of vacant, dormant and derelict land are in the ownership of his Department; and when he expects to sell them.

Mr. Chope: Fifteen sites, all of which are in varying stages of disposal, and I expect to complete sales by the end of this financial year.

Litter

26. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any recent representations from tourist authorities for more effective powers to combat litter.

Mr. Moynihan: No, but I am aware of their concern about litter, which I share.

London Docklands Development Corporation

27. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the chairman or board of the London Docklands development corporation concerning its response to the letter from Messrs. Robson Rhodes concerning its financial procedures.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has examined the issues identified by Messrs. Robson Rhodes following its 1985-86 external audit of the corporation and the LDDC board's response. I will make a statement shortly about the Department's conclusions.

Reddish Vale (Sale)

28. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the sale of Reddish Vale by the Greater Manchester residuary body.

Mr. Chope: I have received representations from hon. Members, from Stockport and Tameside district councils, from the Tame Valley joint committee and from local residents.

Local Authorities and Housing Associations

30. Mr. Rogers To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is planning to take to reinforce the partnership between local authorities and housing associations.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have provided the framework for partnership between local authorities and housing associations. We are considering ways in which Exchequer support might be continued for local authority funding of housing association schemes. It is up to local authorities and housing associations themselves to develop partnership.

Private Rented Accommodation

31. Ms. Short To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the demand for private rented accommodation at market rents.

Mrs. Roe: It is not possible to make any precise estimate of the demand for private rented accommodation at market rents. It is, however, clear that there will always be people who want to rent, in particular, the young, single and mobile and those who cannot afford owner-occupation. We owe it to these people to provide a healthy private sector and we are confident that deregulation of future lettings will help to achieve this objective.

Nuclear Waste

32. Mr. Kennedy To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the chairman of Nirex to discuss matters relating to the management of nuclear waste.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) on 17 February at column 673.

Vacant Land (Disposal)

33. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much vacant land has been handed over to the Property Services Agency by Government Departments for disposal and has not been sold after 12 months.

42. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land has been handed over to the Property Services Agency by Government Departments for disposal and has not been sold after 12 months.

64. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the owners of public vacant land in respect of which he has issued more than three disposal notices since the procedures were introduced.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

My right hon. Friend has given notice, under section 99 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, on more than three occasions, to the following public bodies in respect of unused and underused land in their ownership:

Barking and Dagenham LB
Cheshire CC
Derbyshire CC
Doncaster MBC
Hounslow LB

Kingston LB
Kingston-upon-Hull City Council
Lambeth LB
Leeds City Council
Manchester City Council
Sheffield MDC
Shropshire CC
Southwark LB
Sunderland MBC
Tameside MBC
Trafford MBC

66. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by size of land holding, the largest public owners of vacant land.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

On 31 March 1988, the 10 public bodies with the largest areas of land recorded on the registers of publicly-owned unused and underused land were:

	Acres
1. British Rail	8,613
2. DHSS	3,926
3. CEGB	2,724
4. Commission for New Towns	2,507
5. Telford Development Corporation	1,878
6. British Coal	1,781
7. Warrington Development Corporation	1,640
8. Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority	1,410
9. Bristol City Council	1,312
10. Leeds City Council	1,222

58. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much dormant land has been handed over to the Property Services Agency by Government Departments for disposal and has not been sold after 12 months.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) earlier today.

Rates

34. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement in respect of the average increase in rates from 1 April.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) earlier today.

56. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the average increase in domestic rates from 1 April.

Mr. Howard: 8·8 per cent.

Public Vacant Land

37. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average time that public vacant land sites remain on the land register.

Mr. Trippier: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Southern England (Development)

38. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce new controls to restrain development pressures in southern England.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are pursuing a range of policies designed to encourage development in other parts of the country, particularly the inner cities. But provision for economic growth and new housing will still need to be made in southern England. It is the job of the planning system to ensure that necessary development is accommodated in ways which do not conflict with our policies for the green belt and the protection of the countryside.

Rubbish (Illegal Dumping)

39. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with local authorities about the possibility of strengthening present legislation on the illegal dumping of rubbish in residential areas.

Mr. Moynihan: There have been no recent discussions with local authorities about illegal dumping, but the Government remain concerned that action should be taken to reduce or eliminate it. Our proposals for strengthening the law on waste disposal, including a duty of care on waste producers and registration of waste carriers, were made in a consultation paper issued in September 1986. We are considering the responses and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Metaldehydrate and Methiocarb

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any evidence of harmful effects to land, rivers and plant life caused by the use of metaldehydrate and methiocarb.

Mr. Moynihan: I am advised that the substance referred to in the question as metaldehydrate is probably metaldehyde. Products containing metaldehyde and methiocarb are approved under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 for specified uses, mainly as molluscicides. Both substances are toxic and can be harmful to pets and to wildlife, including birds and fish. Pesticides containing these substances should not present an undue hazard to the environment when used according to the conditions of approval.

Rugby Union

43. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the president of the Rugby Union; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I last met the president of the Rugby Football Union on 16 December 1987. We discussed taxation and rates, sporting links with South Africa, drug abuse in sport, the rugby World Cup and the redevelopment of Twickenham.

Berkshire Structure Plan

44. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concerning his proposed modifications to the Berkshire structure plan.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has received 2,188 written representations to his proposed modifications to the replacement structure plan for Berkshire, together with a substantial petition. The six-week period for representations ended on 31 March 1988.

Green Belt Development (Legal Costs)

45. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make provision for assistance with legal costs for objections against substantial planning applications affecting rural land and land within the green belt.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no plans to alter the long-standing arrangement that the cost of promoting and of resisting development proposals falls to the respective parties. Nevertheless, applicants who unreasonably pursue on appeal proposals which are contrary to established planning policy, whether in the green belt or elsewhere, may find that the costs of the proceedings where there is an inquiry, including the costs of objectors, are awarded against them.

Benthall Park Development

46. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his decision on the proposed Benthall park development, in the light of the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the green belt.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Benthall park development was allowed because of the pressing need to provide new housing for Harlow and the Stansted airport expansion. The detailed boundary of the green belt in the area has yet to be defined. The circumstances of that case were exceptional, and the decision does not signify any lessening of the Government's commitment to protect the green belt from inappropriate development.

Vacant Inner-City Land

48. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has commissioned to examine the causes of inner city land remaining vacant.

Mr. Trippier: In February 1988 we published "Vacant Urban Land: A Literature Review 1976-86", the central part of which outlines the current state of knowledge on the nature of the urban land market and in particular the causes of urban land vacancy. The Property Advisory Group is presently examining the problems of vacant inner city land, and we expect to commission further research in the near future.

Tree Preservation Orders (Compensation)

49. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to limit the compensation that may be paid when a tree preservation order is issued to a valuation as woodland.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the Adjournment debate which took place in the House on 22 March at columns 335-38. The Government are giving urgent consideration to the most appropriate action to maintain the general effectiveness of tree preservation orders affecting woodland, following the recent decision by the Court of Appeal.

Housing Tenancies (Fiscal Neutrality)

50. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to create greater fiscal neutrality amongst the different housing tenancies.

Mrs. Roe: One of the aims of the Government's housing policy is to encourage the revival of private investment in rented housing. The Chancellor's proposal, announced in the Budget, to extend the business expansion scheme to cover the provision of private rented housing will be a major help in encouraging investment in this sector.

Ancient Monuments

51. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the care and protection of ancient monuments.

Mr. Moynihan: We receive various representations and correspondence from time to time about the care and protection of ancient monuments. Many of these relate to applications for scheduled monument consent, suggestions that monuments should be scheduled, or other policy matters connected with the subject. If my hon. Friend has a particular problem in mind, perhaps he would care to write to me so that I can look into the matter properly.

Green Belt

53. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to strengthen the powers of local planning authorities in respect of protecting open spaces and the green belt.

Mr. Waldegrave: Planning authorities already have adequate powers to protect these areas.

Home Improvement Grants

54. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to increase the home improvement grants available to home owners.

Mrs. Roe: The number of improvement grants awarded is determined by local authorities in the light of their assessment of the stock condition in their area and the resources available to them through their housing investment programme allocation and the prescribed proportion of capital receipts. The eligible expense limits used for calculating individual grants are expected to be increased later this year.

Westminster City Council (Cemetery Sales)

55. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement in respect of investigations by the district auditor into the disposal of cemeteries by Westminster city council.

Mr. Chope: The district auditor is still investigating the matter and I cannot anticipate the outcome.

Land Disposal

57. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking in the context of the recent Government policy statement "Action for Inner Cities", to speed up the disposal of land from the land registers.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 7 March at columns 75-76. The policy outlined then is additional to action already in train: the provisions of the Local Government Act 1988 streamline the procedures for directing disposals; and since 7 March further disposal directions have been issued and statutory procedures initiated in respect of other pieces of land.

Government-owned Empty Property

59. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is initiating any action to bring Government-owned empty property into use for families in housing stress.

Mrs. Roe: Departments are fully aware of the need to bring empty dwellings back into use or, where they are no longer needed, to sell them as quickly as possible. Operational requirements are reviewed regularly and targets (agreed with the Treasury) set to reduce their vacant stock.

Where Departments have no immediate operational need for empty dwellings but disposal is not practicable, they are encouraged to let them temporarily to local authorities or housing associations so that they may be used for homeless people. So far more than 275 lettings have been arranged by the Ministry of Defence.

House Repairs

60. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage local authorities to find their own schemes for repairing houses designated as defective under the Housing Act 1985.

Mrs. Roe: Of the 50 repair systems for designated house types now licensed by PRC Homes Ltd., six have been commissioned by local authorities, and three more are currently under appraisal. Local authorities are already encouraged to submit their own schemes for licensing, particularly where they possess house types not commonly found elsewhere.

London (Voluntary Sector)

61. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent study he has made of the effect of Greater London council abolition on the voluntary sector in London.

Mr. Chope: I have not commissioned such a study and have no plans to do so.

Water Companies Association

62. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the Water Companies Association; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: With the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Water, I met representatives of the Water Companies Association on 25 January. We discussed their response to our two consultation papers on the statutory water companies.

Out-of-Town Shopping Centres

63. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he uses, with particular reference to the impact on employment in the inner cities, when deciding upon planning applications for out-of-town shopping centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to a planning policy guidance note on major retail development (PPG6) issued by my Department and the Welsh Office on 20 January this year. Copies are in the Library. The note advises that, exceptionally, it will be necessary to consider whether the cumulative effects of other recent and proposed large scale retail developments in a locality could seriously affect the vitality and viability of a nearby town centre as a whole.

Housing Action Trusts

67. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now announce the areas where the first housing action trusts will be established.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland) on 16 March 1988 at column 598.

London Residuary Body

68. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to add an additional member nominated by the Association of London Authorities to the London residuary body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 14 April at column 233.

Redundant Farm Buildings

69. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to take to encourage the conversion of redundant farm buildings for small businesses.

Mrs. Roe: The planning policy guidance note on rural enterprise and development (PPG7), issued jointly by my Department and the Welsh Office on 20 January this year, emphasised yet again the contribution that reuse of redundant farm buildings can make to the rural economy without harm to the rural environment. Grants for the conversion of redundant buildings in rural development areas are available from the Rural Development Commission.

System Built Housing

70. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the types of building systems designated under the Housing Defects Act.

Mrs. Roe: We have no general plans to review the list of nationally designated property types; but we are currently reconsidering Milton Keynes borough council's request that certain properties in its area be designated nationally and hope to reach a decision shortly.

Special Need Housing

71. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning the future provision of special needs housing by housing associations; and when he will publish the planned consultation paper on the future of hostel deficit grant.

Mrs. Roe: The Government recognise the achievements of the housing association movement in the provision of special needs housing, and continue to attach great importance to the work of associations in this area. The Department's consultation paper on the future of hostel deficit grant will be issued within the next few weeks.

Private Empty Properties (Lease-back Arrangements)

72. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is making additional funds available for local authorities to enter into lease-back arrangements with the owners of private empty properties.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend's statement of 9 March indicated that he would consider giving additional capital allocations to facilitate projects which were brought within the capital control system by the measures announced in his statement, but which had not primarily been entered into for the purpose of avoiding capital expenditure or borrowing controls. In addition, my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced on 24 March that £28 million extra capital allocations would be targeted on local authorities where homelessness pressures are most acute. These allocations will not be confined to schemes for the leasing of property as these are not necessarily the most cost-effective means of providing accommodation.

East Deane Local Plan

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the inspector into the East Deane local plan, relating to Taunton Deane, Somerset.

Mr. Waldegrave: Inspectors who conduct inquiries into local plans report not to my right hon. Friend but to the local planning authority which prepared the plan. I understand that the inspector's report on the East Deane local plan was sent to Taunton Deane borough council on 15 April.

Haringey (Rate Support Grant)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of rate support grant to Haringey borough council in each year since 1979 at current prices; and what proportion this represented of their total income.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

	Rate support grant £ million	Per cent. of total income[1]
1979-80	52·902	56·7
1980-81	61·816	51·9
1981-82[2]	56·489	38·9
1982-83[2]	60·325	41·0
1983-84[3]	56·986	33·5
1984-85[3]	56·691	31·0
1985-86[3]	63·605	30·0
1986-87[4]	51·047	n/a
1987-88[4]	71·511	n/a
1988-89[4]	84·667	n/a

[1] Total income is defined as rate fund revenue account gross income comprising sales, fees, charges, interest receipts, local rates, specific grants and rate support grant. It is net of general administration recharged to other services and accounts.

[2] The grant figures and grant as a percentage of total income are not comparable with those for years before 1981-82 because the arrangements for paying grant changed in 1981-82; the needs resources and domestic elements of grant were replaced by block grant and domestic rate relief grant.

[3] Income and grant as a percentage of total income are not comparable with those for years before 1983-84 due to the introduction of the unified housing benefit scheme in 1983-84 when arrangements for paying grant to local authorities were changed.

[4] The grant figures are not comparable with those for years before 1986-87 because of changes in local authorities' responsibilities following the abolition of the GLC.

n/a = not available.

Rhinoceros Populations and Products

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 28 January, Official Report, column 375, what progress he has made in formulating a detailed response to the resolution passed at the sixth meeting of the parties to CITES, relating to rhinoceros populations and trade in rhinoceros products.

Mr. Moynihan: A detailed response to this resolution remains a matter for discussion with our European Community partners. Meanwhile the controls on international trade in rhino horn remain as set out in my reply of 28 January. We have in addition, through our embassies in Kinshasa and Dhubai registered with the Burundi and UAE authorities, United Kingdom's concern about illegal trade in this product.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions are in existence to ensure that employment opportunities are made available to local residents in those areas where urban development corporations have been established.

Mr. Trippier: All urban development corporations see the creation of employment opportunities for those who live in and around their areas as an important part of their work. Each makes provision which seems appropriate to its circumstances.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each urban development corporation the percentage change in unemployment that has been realised since their establishment.

Mr. Trippier: Unemployment statistics are not available specifically for the areas of urban development corporations, although certain surveys have been carried out in Merseyside and London docklands. The Department of the Environment, the Manpower Services Commission and the corporations themselves have recently presented evidence on this complex subject to the Employment Committee. This will be published in due course, but in the meantime I refer the hon. Member to the uncorrected proofs which have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each urban development corporation the percentage and real term increase in value of property for sale and lease since their inception.

Mr. Trippier: Property values vary widely within each urban development corporation's area. There is no single measure of property values in each area currently available. The answer I gave the hon. Member on March 22, at column 55, may be helpful in indicating current values in the areas of the first two corporations, the range of those values and the factors which influence them.

Hevenigham Hall

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the identity of the present owner of Hevenigham hall, and as to their nature and status.

Mr. Moynihan: Hevenigham hall was conveyed in November 1981 to ID Investment Development AG, a company registered in Switzerland.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to identify the persons or bodies responsible for discharging the undertakings given at the time of the sale of Hevenigham hall; and what steps are being taken to enforce the discharge of those undertakings.

Mr. Moynihan: Hevenigham hall was conveyed to ID Investment Development AG in November 1981. Mr. Abdul-Amir Misr Al-Ghazzi personally covenanted with the Secretary of State in December 1981 that he would himself, so far as he was able, observe, or procure the observance of, the covenants of sale if the company should in any respect fail to fulfil them.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) on 18 February in respect of the discharging of the covenants of sale. We continue to monitor the situation carefully.

River Bailiffs

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision there will be for bailiffing of rivers when the National River Authority is created.

Mr. Moynihan: The National Rivers Authority will assume the responsibility of the water authorities for fisheries conservation and management, and will be expected to adopt positive policies for fisheries management, including bailiffing.

Hydrologic Code Comparison Project

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the hydrologic code intercomparison project sponsored by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development nuclear energy agency has been completed; and whether the United Kingdom has contributed any technical assistance to the project.

Mr. Moynihan: If the hon. Member is referring to the international HYDROCOIN (hydrological code intercomparison) project, which was started in May 1984 by the Swedish nuclear power inspectorate (SKI), the Nuclear Energy Agency (NEA) of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development participates as a member of the project secretariat, I understand that the project is complete and that reports of the various test cases are being prepared for publication in the near future. The British Geological Survey, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and Atkins Research and Development Ltd. have participated in the project.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Her Majesty's Government will ratify the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Moynihan: The text of the protocol was laid before both Houses on 26 January 1988 and the necessary parliamentary procedures are, therefore, complete for the United Kingdom. We are now consulting the dependent territories and expect this process to be completed in good time to meet the target date for the protocol to enter into force on 1 January 1989. We are also discussing with our European partners a proposed decision that would enable the Community and its member states to ratify the protocol simultaneously.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what nations are currently signatories to the Montreal protocol; and which of them have ratified it.

Mr. Moynihan: The information is as follows:

At a Diplomatic Conference on 16 September 1987 the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer was signed by:

Belgium
Canada
Denmark
European Economic Community
Egypt
Finland
France
Germany, Federal Republic of Ghana
Italy
Japan
Kenya
Mexico
Netherlands
New Zealand
Norway
Panama
Portugal
Senegal
Sweden
Switzerland
Togo
United Kingdom
United States of America
Venezuela

We understand from the United Nations environment programme that it has since been signed by:

Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic
Greece
Israel
Luxembourg
Morocco
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

So far as we have been informed, the United States is the only country to have ratified the protocol.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the amount by which (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the European Community will have to cut consumption of chlorofluorocarbons by (a) 1990, (b) 1994 and (c) 1999 to meet the requirements of the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Moynihan: Under the Montreal protocol all parties are required by 1990 to freeze consumption of CFCs 11, 12, 113, 114 and 115 at 1986 levels; to reduce their consumption by 20 per cent. by 1994; and by a further 30 per cent. by 1999. The proposed regulation for implementing the protocol envisages that obligations in regard to consumption will be fulfilled by the Community as a whole but complete information about its level of consumption is not yet available. Separate figures are not available for the United Kingdom or other individual member states.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on (i) the outcome of the European Community Council of Ministers meeting on 21 March regarding implementation of the Montreal protocol, (ii) what implementation programmes have been and will be undertaken by each of the European Community member states and (iii) future plans for consultation among European Community member states.

Mr. Moynihan: On the hon. Member's first point, I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on 24 March at columns 186-87. Communitywide implementation of the protocol is the subject of a proposed regulation which is being examined by member states and which will be discussed by the Environment Council on 16 June.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to request a review of the terms of the Montreal protocol in the light of new scientific data particularly that published by the International Ozone Trends Panel on 15 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Montreal protocol contains its own provisions for regular reviews of the control measures on the basis of scientific, environmental, technical and economic information. The first such review will be undertaken in 1990. In the meantime the Department's stratospheric ozone research group is studying all the latest scientific evidence, including that of the ozone trends panel, and will publish an up-to-date assessment in the autumn.

Ozone Research Programme

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for public expenditure on each stratospheric ozone research programme receiving grants from Her Majesty's Government for each year since 1980 for which figures are available; and whether he plans to increase expenditure on such research.

Mr. Moynihan: Expenditure on stratospheric ozone research by the Department, the Meteorological Office, the Natural Environment Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council, for each year since 1980 is as follows:

Expenditure by the Department has risen steadily over this period, and we are considering a further increase.

Sewers (Leeds)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what request he has received for an increase in the capital funding for the Yorkshire water authority for the completion of resewering of the Rothwell area of Leeds; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what request he has had for additional assistance to the Yorkshire water authority to help prevent raw sewage entering the river Dolphin in Rothwell, Leeds; what response he has made, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: None. This year my right hon. Friend increased capital expenditure provision for Yorkshire Water to £132 million.

Water Privatisation

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the Water Authorities Association about the regulation which will apply in the water industry following the privatisation legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Pursuant to my answer on 9 March to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) at column 228, the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Water met the chairman of the Water Authorities Association on 8 March and 19 April to discuss a range of issues relating to the privatisation of the water industry, including regulation.

Water Services

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assurances he has given to the Water Authorities Association about the maintenance of the efficiency of water authorities' services after the demise of the integrated river basin concept of management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the consultation paper and policy memorandum, published by the Government in July and December last year. Copies of both were placed in the Library of the House.

Air Pollution

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the dangers that can be caused by the discharge of an excessive level of sulphur dioxide into the atmosphere over England and Wales.

Mr. Moynihan: There is extensive literature on health and other effects of sulphur dioxide, a convenient summary of which is contained in WHO "Air Quality Guidelines for Europe," WHO regional publications, European series No. 23. The permitted level for SO_2 in air is set by the EC directive 80/779/EEC.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has on the dangers that can be caused by the discharge of an excessive level of heavy metals into the atmosphere over England and Wales;

(2) what assessment is made by his Department of the level of heavy metals discharged into the atmosphere annually from the burning of fossil fuels by electricity generating stations in England and Wales; what are the levels for the remaining discharge of heavy metals; and what is treated as a safe level.

Mr. Moynihan: There is extensive literature on the health and environmental effects of excessive levels of heavy metals. In England and Wales Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution ensures that best practicable means are used to reduce emissions to the atmosphere from power stations and other scheduled works to safe levels set on the basis of the available scientific data. Current presumptive emission limits are given in appendix 7 of the industrial air pollution report for 1986, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Total emissions are not assessed as a matter of routine in the United Kingdom, but concentrations of a wide range of metals in the environment are regularly measured in both urban and rural areas. The results are reported in Department of the Environment "Statistical Bulletin (87) 1", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. For lead the permitted level in the air is set in the EC directive (82/884/EEC).

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measurements are made by his Department to assess the emissions of sulphur dioxide into the atmosphere in England and Wales; and what comparable information he has for France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Finland over the years since 1980.

Mr. Moynihan: Estimates of sulphur dioxide emissions are made from the quantity of fossil fuel used and of its sulphur content. The results are published annually in the Department of the Environment's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. Details of the methods used are given in the Warren Spring laboratory report WSL LR634 a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House. In 1986 the executive body of the convention on long-range transboundary air pollution published a major review entitled "National strategies and policies for Air Pollution Abatement" which contains estimates of SO_2 emissions provided by France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Finland for years since 1980. A copy of the report is in the Library of the House.

Water Byelaws

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the new model water byelaws.

Mr. Moynihan: The latest edition of the model water byelaws was published in June 1986.

Drinking Water

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to bring the quality of drinking water in England and Wales up to the standard required by the European Economic Community in advance of the date previously given.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 April 1988]: I welcome any steps being taken by water undertakers to comply with the EC drinking water directive in advance of dates already set.

Water (Nitrates Pollution)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what evidence he has of increased pollution of public water supplies by nitrates over the past 20 years; and what are the reasons for the increase;

(2) what evidence he has of the increased pollution of groundwater supplies by nitrates over the past 20 years; and if he will make a statement on the implications of this for public health policy.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer, 19 April 1988]: In 1986, 152 groundwater sources occasionally or persistently contained nitrate concentrations exceeding 50 mg per litre, compared with approximately 90 in 1980 and 60 in 1970. The increased nitrate concentrations can be attributed to the substantial change in farming methods over the last few decades.

As a result of action by water undertakers, nitrate concentrations regularly exceed 50 mg per litre in only 50 public supplies though the concentrations are not considered unsafe by medical advisers. Nevertheless, the rising trend in some areas is a matter of concern and the Government are considering ways of tackling the problem.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he agreed to the European Community directive restricting nitrate pollution of water supplies to 50 mg; what expert advice was received from outside his Department on the health aspects of the issue; and what is the level now recommended by the World Health Organisation and other comparable bodies.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 April 1988]: The EC directive on the quality of water intended for human consumption was adopted in 1980. The nitrate standard was agreed because the figure of 50 mg of nitrate per litre had been recommended by the World Health Organisation as a guideline value since 1970, and medical experts in this country accepted that recommendation. Guideline values are intended to safeguard health, assuming life-long consumption at that value.

The World Health Organisation has since reviewed its guideline values for substances in drinking water and in 1984 published recommendations which included a revised value of 10 mg of nitrate as nitrogen per litre (equivalent to 44·6 mg of nitrate per litre). The apparent reduction from 50 mg of nitrate per litre to 44·6 mg per litre is of no medical significance.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of public water supplies which exceed the 50 mg limit in relation to nitrate pollution; what will be the cost of bringing these supplies within the directive; and what is the body responsible for paying such costs.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 April 1988]: Fifty public water supplies are estimated to contain nitrate concentrations above 50 mg per litre. The Department is currently seeking information on how much it would cost water undertakers to comply with the EC drinking water directive limit for nitrate.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of the Single European Act provisions on the responsibilities for pollution in relation to Government policy; how these are determined; and if consideration has been given to the allocation of the cost of preventing nitrate pollution.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 April 1988]: The Single European Act introduced changes to the treaty of Rome. Among these is a new chapter on the environment. This lays down broad objectives in the area of environmental protection. It also confirms the principles of preventive action, that environmental damage should as a priority be rectified at source, and that the polluter should pay. However, the Act does not have specific implications for Government responsibilities; rather, it serves as a platform for the production of further Council legislation, which will be more specific in its terms.

The articles in the new environment chapter (Articles 130R, 130S and 130T) now provide the usual legal base for environmental measures. These articles proceed on the basis of unanimity, at least in the first instance.

Limestone Purchases

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice was given by his Department to the Central Electricity Generating Board on purchases of limestone for flue gas desulphurisation from quarries outside the national parks.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 19 April 1988]: My Department was one of a number of organisations consulted by the Central Electricity Generating Board on its proposals for obtaining the supplies of limestone it needed for flue gas desulphurisation. My Department drew the board's attention to the importance of the Government's policy on winning and working of minerals in national parks and the statement by my hon. Friend the member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) on 9 April, at columns 393-94. We also called attention to reports published by the British Geological Survey which described the location and quality of limestone resources both inside and outside national parks. We advised the board to discuss its needs with the mineral planning authorities, in order to establish whether suitable supplies of limestone would be available from outside the national parks, and the wider planning issues.

Richmond Terrace

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proportion of the annual budget for property valuation and revaluation was used over the valuation of Richmond terrace;

(2) whether he will make a statement as to the effect on resources available to the Property Services Agency for valuation and revaluation of property arising from his decision to employ Cluttons to value Richmond terrace.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Sums for valuation and revaluation of property are made available from resources set aside for expenditure on consultants' fees. Final figures for PSA expenditure on consultants' fees in 1987-88 for the civil estate are not yet available, but the total is expected to be about £56 million. Cluttons' fee for the valuation of Richmond house comprised substantially less than 0·1 per cent. of this expenditure. The effect on resources available to PSA for the employment of consultants was therefore minimal.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress being made by the National Employer Liaison Committee on stimulating recruitment into the Territorial Army.

Mr. Freeman: Provision has been made to find the central major publicity campaign recommended by the National Employer Liaison Committee. Preparatory work had already been carried out and planning is now under way, in order to launch the campaign in autumn 1988. Although this campaign is intended primarily to improve the status, and promote public awareness, of not only the Territorial Army, but the other reserve forces, we would hope to see benefits in both recruitment and retention.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what number of beds there are, and what is the average level of occupancy, in each of his Department's hospitals in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) on 12 January, at columns 200-2.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the movement of United States' nuclear weapons from continental Europe to the United Kingdom as part of the redistribution of nuclear forces in Europe under the terms of the Montebello decision.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to comment on the location of nuclear weapons.

NATO

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the next nuclear planning group meeting will be discussing modernisation and redeployment of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation maritime tactical nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 22 January at column 899.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement regarding his definition and understanding of the use of the expression class of firearm in relation to the civilian use of firearms on ranges either constructed, maintained or approved by his Department;

(2) on what dates and for what calibre of firearms his Department granted or amended range safety certificates for ranges at (a) Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon, (b) Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company and (c) Wiltshire shooting centre, Devizes, Wiltshire.

Mr. Freeman: The expression "class of firearm" accepted by my Department is as set out in the current Firearms Act and in the Firearms (Amendment) Bill. Range safety certificates have been issued as follows:

a. To Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon on 18 August 1986 for 0·455in centre fire weapons;

b. To Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company (now known as the Lambourn Valley gun club) on 11 May 1987 for centre fire pistol and rim fire rifle 0·455in calibre weapons;

c. To Wiltshire shooting centre, Devizes, initially on 19 September 1983 for 0·455in pistol on the 25m range and 0·455in rifle and pistol on the 100m range. This was amended on 8 April 1985 to increase the calibre for both ranges to 0·8in; on 10 September 1985 to permit single shot firing of 0·5in maching gun into a special bullet catcher from a fixed breach block on the 100m range; on 22 May 1986 to include handheld and tripod mounted automatic weapons on the 100m range; on 6 February 1987 to allow firing of 0·5in Browning machine gun in the automatic mode on the 100m range; and finally on 19 June 1987 to permit a 20m Hispano Suiza cannon to be fired on the 100m range.

MOD range certificates and inspections cover only the safety of range structures and the adequacy of safety rules.

Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of charges brought by the Ministry of Defence police under the Greenham common byelaws that were ruled invalid by Reading Crown court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The total number of charges brought under those provisions of the Greenham common byelaws which have been held to be invalid cannot be identified without disproportionate effort. The Crown Prosecution Service has appealed against the decision given at Reading Crown court on 25 February 1988 and it would therefore not be appropriate for me to comment further.

Enford (Firing Incident)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will initiate an inquiry into the accidental firing of a 105mm artillery shell into the village of Enford on Salisbury plain in Wiltshire, on 11 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: On 11 April a 105mm artillery shell fired by 14 Field Regiment from a light gun on Salisbury plain landed outside the range danger area in the back garden of a resident in Enford. A young boy at school in Enford was hit by a piece of metal, but, fortunately, he was not injured. There were no other injuries, but there was some damage to property and windows. Claims relating to the damage to property will be handled by the Property Services Agency on my Department's behalf and a representative from the Property Services Agency has already visited the properties concerned. The claims branch in my Department is empowered to pay compensation where a causal link has been established between the loss or damage incurred and the military activity.

A preliminary investigation of the incident has been carried out. It has concluded that it was not caused by a fault either in the ammunition or the gun. It is, therefore, likely that the incident was caused by an error in drill by one or more members of the gun crew.

In view of the fact that the incident is believed to have been caused by human error, artillery firing on Salisbury plain has not been suspended. The crucial importance of closely following safety procedures has been drawn to the attention of the regiment concerned. Investigations into the incident are continuing and a board of inquiry will be convened when appropriate. All incidents involving public safety are treated extremely seriously and all practical steps will be taken to find the cause of this incident and to prevent any recurrence. Further safeguards may be introduced in the light of the outcome of the board of inquiry.

Ports (Category 2 Berths)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all category 2 berths in the United Kingdom by port.

Mr. Sainsbury:

Brodick Bay
Campbeltown
Cardiff
Coulport
Devonport
Firth of Forth
Glen Mallan
Lamlash Bay
Lerwick and Shetland Isles

RAF Bentwaters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why two squadrons of United States Air Force A-10As are being moved from RAF Bentwaters to RAF Alconbury; on what dates this move is to be started and completed; what are his plans for the future use of the facilities at Bentwaters vacated by these aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The redeployment of United States Air Force A-10 aircraft from RAF Bentwaters to RAF Alconbury, which was announced in August last year, is part of the continuous process by which the United States seeks the most cost-effective disposition of its assets based in this country in support of NATO. The move began this month and is planned to be complete by the autumn. RAF Bentwaters will continue to be an operational flying station used by the United States Air Force.

Wessex Helicopters

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be (a) the range, (b) the poor-weather performance, (c) the station-keeping abilities, (d) the speed and (e) the accuracy level of the navigational equipment of the Wessex helicopters to be used by the air-sea rescue squadron at RAF Coltishall in place of Sea King helicopters.

Mr. Freeman: The Wessex search and rescue helicopters which will replace those Sea Kings presently at RAF Coltishall have a range of 120 nautical miles. They can operate in most weather conditions, by day and night but for station keeping reply on visual reference only. The maximum speed is 110 knots and they carry a sophisticated navigation system which is highly accurate for low-level flying. Each aircraft also has a fully trained SAR navigator.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied that the replacement of Sea King helicopters with Wessex helicopters at RAF Coltishall will not reduce the performance of the air-sea rescue service covering the North sea.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. The search and rescue service covering the North sea will not be reduced following the replacement of the Sea King helicopters at RAF Coltishall with Wessexes.

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the various establishments now occupying the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, indicating the number of people employed at each.

Mr. Sainsbury:

	Number of employees
MOD Units
Directorate General of Defence Quality Assurance	1,256
Naval Publications Store	83
Air Publications and Forms Stores	105
RAF Movements Unit (London)	33
RAF Signals Unit	206
Ministry of Defence Police	50
Non MOD Units
Books Supply Department (British Library)	24
Her Majesty's Customs & Excise Stores	50
National Maritime Museum	3
Civil Service Catering Organisation	14
Property Services Agency/Department of the Environment	65

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans for a new headquarters building for the directorate general of quality assurance at Woolwich arsenal were drawn up; and what costs have so far been incurred on the project;

(2) how long the location of the headquarters building of the directorate general of quality assurance has been under review; what sites have been considered during that period; and when a decision will finally be taken.

Mr. Sainsbury: Sketch plans for a headquarter building at the royal arsenal, Woolwich for the quality assurance directorate (ordnance) were completed in 1983 at a cost to the Property Services Agency of £300,000. This directorate became part of the directorate general of defence quality assurance in 1984. Since then the directorate general has concentrated on three of its five original sites and a dozen sites in the midlands and the north and south of England including the royal arsenal have been studied by accommodation staffs for suitability as a single headquarter location. This is an expensive project and a decision will be taken when the complex and continuous preparatory work of exploring options is complete.

Tain Bombing Range

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he willl make a statement on the proposed privatisation of certain services at Tain bombing range.

Mr. Sainsbury: On 24 March 1988, we informed the trades unions of our intention to seek tenders for the provision of services at Tain. If these services are put out to contract, some seven civilian staff would be affected. However, no final decision will be made until the tenders have been assessed and compared with the cost of current arrangements.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects to receive the results of the current review of search and rescue operations;

(2) if it is the Government's intention to maintain search and rescue operations at RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Freeman: Certain elements of our review of the most effective deployment of military search and rescue helicopters have been completed and announced. Studies into the deployment of the remaining aircraft continue, and I shall announce the outcome as soon as possible.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the need to maintain search and rescue operations at RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Freeman: A number of hon. Members, including the hon. Member and my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker), have raised with me the importance of search and rescue operations at RAF Leuchars.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the statutory and other powers under which his Department authorises military low flying training.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Military low flying training is carried out in the essential interests of national defence under the royal prerogative.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what child care provision his Ministry provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after school care is provided for employees' children age five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. MacGregor: Summer holiday play schemes are currently being arranged at two locations and pump-priming finance has been made available to help them succeed. Similar assistance will be given to any other appropriate child care scheme presented by parents.

Brucellosis

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish the number of cases of beef cattle found to have brucellosis in on-farm tests for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. MacGregor: The information cannot be provided without disproportionate cost. However, the numbers of beef and dairy herds from which brucella abortus has been isolated since 1983 are:

Herds from which brucella abortus isolated

Fresh Water Fisheries

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money is spent on fresh water fisheries research in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales.

Mr. Gummer: Government expenditure on research and development related to salmon and freshwater fisheries in 1987-88 is estimated at £2 million. Of this amount, £625,000 was expenditure by my Department on work relating to both England and Wales. Expenditure on research and development related to salmon and freshwater fisheries is also incurred by the water authorities and NERC research institutes, but details are not held centrally.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 18 and 19 April in Luxembourg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The greater part of this meeting, at which I represented the United Kingdom, was devoted to discussion of the Commission's proposals for farm prices and related measures in 1988-89. No decisions were taken, and no real progress was made. The Council will return to the subject at its next meeting. I again emphasised the importance I attach to the devaluation of the green pound and the removal of monetary compensatory amounts for pigmeat.

The Council had, at its two previous meetings, reached agreement on the Commission's proposals for detailed implementation of the arrangements for stabilising agricultural expenditure and related matters, including the set-aside of arable land, following the outcome of the summit in February. This Council meeting included a session with representatives of the European Parliament, at which the Parliament's opinions on the Commission's proposals were discussed, with the exception of the stabiliser in the wine sector, on which the Parliament's opinion is not yet available. Following this discussion, it was decided that the texts of these measures should be formally adopted without further discussion next week except for wine which will be formally adopted as soon as the Parliament's opinion has been received. I made it clear that since it has always been crucial to the United Kingdom Government that the stabiliser package must be approved as a whole it would be necessary that appropriate arrangements were agreed for ensuring that the wine stabiliser was not weakened; I secured a satisfactory Council declaration on this point.

The Council reached agreement on the remaining technical points on a draft directive on quick-frozen foods. I successfully resisted attempts to reduce the 10-year transitional period for retail cabinets and temperature tolerance, which are of substantial importance to our industry. This directive will be finalised after further discussion on the implementing details.

I opposed the adoption of the proposals for the harmonisation of meat inspection charges, which is unsatisfactory in its present form. This proposal, together with those on the therapeutic use of hormones and the import of meat for pet food will come back to the Council at its next meeting after further discussion at official level.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General when he anticipates that the establishment numbers will be complete in the Crown Prosecution Service; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: It is difficult to estimate when the establishment figures within the Crown Prosecution Service will be complete until the full impact has been felt of the proposed new pay scales for lawyers. In addition to this offer, the service is considering a number of initiatives aimed at encouraging recruitment and retention of staff.

TRANSPORT

Speed Limits

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce the use of rural and urban speed limits.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. The Department has given guidance on criteria for speed limits to all highway authorities through circulars roads 1/80 and 4/83. The guidance is advisory but is widely respected and followed. The aim is to achieve realistic speed limits which give a satisfactory balance between safety and the need for fast convenient travel.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday and/or after school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre at Swansea runs an annual summer holiday play scheme for children of school age. An experimental child care acheme was held at the Cardington residential training centre for two weeks in August 1987. The Department is considering what scope there is for further provision without continuing subsidy.

Bus Services (London)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to deregulate bus services in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It remains our intention to extend bus deregulation to London in the early 1990s.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report for each highway authority in England the percentage of each authority's bid for transport supplementary grant that is attributable to minor works for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is given in the following table.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report for each highway authority in England the percentage of each authority's bid for transport supplementary grant and its transport supplementary grant allocation attributable to roads on the primary route network, for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is given in the following table for major schemes (each costing over £1 million). Equivalent data including minor works could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

(1) and (3) Percentage of bid for major schemes (costing over £1 million) which is attributable to roads on primary route network (including designated roads in London) for respective years.

(2) and (4) Percentage of expenditure accepted for transport supplementary grant for major schemes (costing over £1 million) which is attributable to roads on primary route network (including designated roads in London) for respective years.

Fares

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any information about the likely change in the number of (a) bus, (b) coach and (c) rail passengers carried as fare levels change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department does not itself publish general data on the effects of fare changes on public transport passenger levels. This information is available from various sources such as London Regional Transport and some passenger transport executives. Also, fom time to time, university research departments publish studies and the Department's Transport and Road Research Laboratory issued a wide ranging collection of evidence in 1980. However, where the Department is involved in individual investment decisions an examination is undertaken of the elasticities involved, in particular the interaction between public transport fares and road traffic congestion levels.

London City Airport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what application has been made to him by the Civil Aviation Authority to permit experimental flights of jet aircraft to or from London City airport; what response has been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received no application and does not expect one. Permission for such flights is not within his jurisdiction.

Airline Competition Policy

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the status of the 1984 White Paper on airline competition policy following the British Airways takeover of B-Cal; and if he has any plans to publish a new statement of policy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's objectives remain as set out in the 1984 airline competition policy White Paper:

—to encourage a sound and competitive multi-airline industry;

—to promote competition in all markets.

— to ensure adequate safeguards against anti-competitive behaviour by airlines.

The Civil Aviation Authority is considering the responses to its consultation on its revised statement of air transport licensing policies, which takes account of recent developments including the BA/B.CAL merger. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to publish a further statement.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Overloading)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has plans to review the adequacy of the current level of penalties to deter heavy goods vehicle operators from overloading, in relation to the profitable nature of the offence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The level of fines imposed by the magistrates courts for overloading offences usually falls far short of the maximum provided by statute.

Seriously overloaded vehicles are prohibited from proceeding until they have been unloaded. This provides a deterrent.

In the case of habitual offenders the traffic commissioners can revoke or curtail an operator's licence. On 150 occasions last year overloading was one of the grounds for such action.

During 1988-89 the Department's traffic examiners plan to weigh nearly 100,000 goods vehicles, an increase of 35 per cent. compared with 1987-88.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Commission Projects (Grants)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 27 January, Official Report, column 302, if he will list the projects covered in each region by the Manpower Services Commission's local grants to employers programme, distinguishing between training and consultancy grants.

Mr. Cope: This information is not available. Information about projects to support individual employers is confidential for commercial reasons.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the number of employers against whom legal action has been taken over the last five years in connection with the quota scheme of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. Lee: There have been no prosecutions under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 in the last five years. The last prosecution was in 1975.

Lime Spraying

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information his Department has about the health and safety requirements for the spraying of lime and other potentially dangerous substances in residential areas.

Mr. Nicholls: When the spraying of lime and other potentially dangerous substances in residential areas is carried out as part of a work activity it is subject to the general requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and, in the case of pesticides, the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the current unemployment and unfilled vacancies figures on his Department's register for the travel-to-work areas of Ashford, Canterbury, Dover and Folkestone, respectively.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unfilled vacancies (excluding community programme vacancies) at job-centres covering areas closely corresponding to the Ashford, Canterbury, Dover and Deal and Folkestone travel-to-work areas on 4 March 1988, together with the total number of unemployed claimants in each travel-to-work area on 10 March 1988.

Travel-to-work area	Unfilled vacancies	Unemployed claimants
Ashford	727	2,328
Canterbury	914	3,873
Dover and Deal	590	3,551
Folkestone	529	3,625

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Cells (Escaped Prisoners)

13. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners remanded to police cells escaped between 1 January and 31 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police inform me that the information available, which may not be complete, records that 15 such prisoners escaped during that period.

Television Programmes (Content)

14. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the British Broadcasting Corporation and independent television companies about the family viewing content of television programmes broadcast before 9 pm

Mr. Renton: We have discussions with the broadcasting authorities from time to time on a wide range of issues, including their responsibility for programme standards. In this context, my right hon. Friend met the chairmen of the BBC and IBA on 29 September 1987 in order to discuss the portrayal of violence and sex on television. The broadcasting authorities have issued guidance on these matters, including advice on the timing of programmes and the care which needs to be taken when children and young persons are likely to be viewing.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

15. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to monitor the change in the incidence of residential burglaries in areas where neighbourhood watch schemes have been established; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Where police forces have been able to isolate crime figures to areas covered by individual schemes the results have indicated that well-run schemes can reduce the level of local crime including residential burglary. For example, neighbourhood watch schemes were established in the five towns project area in north Tyneside. By the end of the first 18 months of the project, residential burglary was down by 23 per cent. and crime overall was reduced by 18 per cent. Given that there are now over 50,000 schemes in England and Wales, it would not be practical for the Home Office to collect such results centrally, but we are considering proposals for a study in one police force area of the effectiveness of neighbourhood watch schemes in preventing crime.

21. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the spread and achievements of the neighbourhood watch movement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are now more than 50,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales, almost double the figure 12 months ago. With so many schemes there is inevitably a variation in their size, scope and in the commitment of their members and, like all voluntary activity, some schemes are more effective than others. There are, however, many examples of schemes where crime has been reduced in neighbourhood watch areas coupled with an equally important enhancement, or revival of community spirit.

Solvent Abuse

16. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make solvent abuse a criminal offence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We share the view of most professionals in this field that to criminalise solvent misuse would be counter-productive and likely to deter misusers from seeking the help they need.

Drug Misuse

17. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the work of the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The ministerial group on the misuse of drugs, which I chair, continues to develop the Government's strategy to reduce both the supply of and demand for illicit drugs. Recent measures include improved international co-operation, strengthened enforcement by Customs and police, and increased prevention measures in the health and education fields.

Drug Trafficking

18. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the steps being taken by the Government to strengthen the capability of the police to combat drug trafficking.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police resources for drugs enforcement have been substantially increased in recent years. All police forces now have drugs squads employing in total more than 850 police officers. Seventeen dedicated drugs wings have recently been added to regional crime squads with 221 additional police officers to man them. The national drugs intelligence unit has been strengthened and further expansion is planned for this financial year. The Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 provides the police with vital new investigative powers which are now being used to good effect.

38. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to combat drug trafficking.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) and to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) on 17 March 1988 at column 656.

Terrorists (TV and Radio Interviews)

19. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce legislation prohibiting television or radio interviews with members of terrorist organisations along the lines of the example set by the Government of the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have no plans at present to introduce legislation prohibiting television or radio interviews with members of terrorist organisations.

Fraud

20. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will review the law on fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Several aspects of the law on fraud are currently being reviewed by the Law Commission, and we shall give careful consideration to its recommendations.

26. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government action to improve the investigation and prosecution of fraud cases.

Mr. John Patten: Many of the reforms which the Roskill committee proposed have been enacted in the Criminal Justice Act 1987. They include creation of the serious fraud office, equipped with extensive investigatory powers and an expert staff, which became operational earlier this month; and changes in court procedure for complex fraud cases which we hope to bring into effect later this year.

In the Criminal Justice Bill we are proposing further measures, including changes to the law of evidence, which will help to bring fraudsters to justice.

Crime Prevention

22. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has received to the new crime prevention advertising campaign.

Mr. Renton: The first phase of this three-year advertising campaign is only now drawing to a close and it is too early to draw conclusions about its effectiveness. We shall be better able to do this when we have the results of the market research we have commissioned. However, we have already received 176,000 requests for the crime prevention handbook featured in the advertising and 450,000 copies are being issued in response. The handbook is being reprinted.

Crime Detection

23. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on steps being taken to increase the crime detection rate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1987, the overall clear-up rate rose from 32 per cent. to 33 per cent. Operational decisions about the investigation of crime are a matter for chief officers. They are adopting a range of strategies, including crime screening and administrative support units, to help target resources more effectively. The Home Office is supporting work to improve the quality of the scientific and technological support available to the police. But in seeking to prevent and detect crime the police also need the help of the whole community. The Government's new crime prevention advertising campaign is aimed at encouraging individuals and groups to involve themselves in this task. Better prevention of crime will allow the police to concentrate resources on the detection of more serious offences.

Association of Chief Police Officers

24. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what subjects he discussed at his last meeting with the Association of Chief Police Officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend and I last met representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers on 24 March. The Metropolitan police were also represented. We discussed the problems caused by the need to accommodate prisoners in police cells.

Leicestershire Police Authority

25. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the request from the Leicestershire police authority for a higher police establishment; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Police Authority has been informed that its application will be considered in the light of advice from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary along with applications from other authorities for increases in establishment in 1988-89.

Judith Ward (Trial Evidence)

27. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the review of the written evidence of Dr. Frank Skuse at the trial of Judith Ward, carried out by the director of the Chorley forensic science laboratory.

35. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the review by the director of the Chorley forensic science laboratory of the evidence of Dr. Frank Skuse at the trial of Judith Ward.

Mr. John Patten: A review of Dr. Skuse's written evidence at the trial of Judith Ward was carried out by the then director, Chorley forensic science laboratory, in 1985, as part of a review of Dr. Skuse's evidence in some 350 cases, dating back to 1966. The director concluded that there were no grounds for suspecting that Dr. Skuse's work in any of these cases had led to any miscarriage of justice.

41. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what scientific tests were carried out by Dr. Frank Skuse to determine the presence of explosives on the person of Judith Ward.

Mr. John Patten: Dr. Skuse carried out the following tests to determine the presence of explosives on the person of Judith Ward:

The Griess Test
Mass spectrometry
Thin layer chromatography (TLC)
Tests for ammonium and nitrate ions.

45. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the review of the evidence of Dr. Frank Skuse at the trial of Judith Ward carried out by the director of the Chorley forensic science laboratory included Dr. Skuse's oral evidence.

Mr. John Patten: No. Mr. Walker, the then director of the laboratory, examined the written material which was available at the laboratory, which included Dr. Skuse's written statement. In any case, I understand that no transcript of Dr. Skuse's oral evidence is available; as none appears to have been produced.

Broadcasting (Restrictive Practices)

28. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the board of governors of the British Broadcasting Corporation to discuss restrictive practices in broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend has meetings with the chairman of the board of governors of the British Broadcasting Corporation from time to time at which various issues are discussed. No meeting is planned specifically to discuss restrictive practices in broadcasting.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment announced on 28 March that questions as to possible restrictive practices in television broadcasting and film production were being referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Civil Defence

29. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to improve the communications network between the emergency regional government centres in the event of a nuclear attack.

Mr. John Patten: The emergency communications network, which includes links between regional Government headquarters in wartime, is being extended and improved. Particular attention is being paid to the potential effects of the nuclear electromagnetic pulse.

Visas

30. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take in relation to the system of visas, so as to stop the exploitation and abuses of immigrant workers by some employers.

Mr. Renton: Immigration control measures can have only a limited effect on employment abuses in this country. If, however, the hon. Member has particular instances or proposals in mind, perhaps he would write to me with the details.

Knives (Criminal Offences)

31. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress in implementing his proposals to combat the increase of offences involving the use of knives.

Mr. John Patten: We have added to the Criminal Justice Bill a new provision making it an offence to be in possession of a bladed or sharply pointed article in a public place without good reason, with the onus on the carrier to show that he has such a reason. This represents a considerable strengthening of the law and will make it easier for the police to deal with people they find carrying knives. The Bill is expected to receive Royal Assent in the summer.

Remand Accommodation (Privatisation)

32. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent consideration he has given to employing the private sector to relieve overcrowding in the remand sector.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement on prisons which my right hon. Friend made to the House on 30 March at columns 1083-85. He announced then our intentions, as part of the measures we are taking to deal with the current and projected growth in the population, to invite the private sector to make proposals for the faster provision of urban remand facilities and open prisons, to publish a Green Paper and set up a consultancy on the scope for involving the private sector in all aspects of the remand system, and to examine the possibility of the private sector providing and managing secure bail hostels.

Crime Statistics

33. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of crimes involving the use of firearms in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable total 10 and 20 years previously.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" copies of which are available in the Library. Table 3.1 in the issue for 1986 (Cm. 233) gives figures for 1976 to 1986 inclusive. Comparable figures are not available before 1969, and figures for 1987 are not available yet.

Auto Crime

34. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of crime in 1987 was accounted for by the theft of, or from, vehicles; and what measures he is taking to reduce auto crime.

Mr. John Patten: In 1987, offences of theft of, and from, motor vehicles accounted for 26·9 per cent. of the total number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in England and Wales.

Last November, the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention set up a working group to consider the prevention of car crime. Rover Group, which is represented on the working group, has offered to produce a thief-proof concept car, incorporating a range of the latest technology in car security, for display at this year's standing conference in December.

Three parts of a British Standard on vehicle security (mechanical locking systems, security of in-car entertainment equipment, and window etching) have been published and further parts are due to be published shortly. We are seeking to have the British Standard adopted as a European Community directive.

Our new crime prevention publicity campaign, launched last month, includes information on car crime and the scope for preventing it.

Birmingham Pub Bombing

36. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the police officers who gave evidence at the original Birmingham pub bombing trial have since been imprisoned for criminal offences; and for what offences.

44. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the police officers who gave evidence against the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings have subsequently been convicted of assaulting suspects with a view to obtaining a confession.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Of the 57 officers who gave written or oral evidence at the trial, none is currently suspended from duty. One, a police constable at the time involved in escort duties, but not in interviewing suspects, and who gave oral evidence, was subsequently, as a sergeant, convicted at Birmingham Crown court on 1 November 1983 of assault occasioning actual bodily harm. The victim was a suspect arrested on suspicion of theft. The officer was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment, six months of which were suspended. He was dismissed from the force.

46. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 1212, before which police force he proposes that those hon. Members with evidence of alleged collusion between the two principal Crown witnesses, Dr. Frank Skuse and Superintendent George Reade, at the recent Appeal Court hearing of the Birmingham pub bombings case, should lay such evidence.

Mr. John Patten: The responsibility for investigating alleged offences rests with the police force in whose area the offence occurred. It will be for that force to seek assistance from any other force as necessary. In the case to which the hon. Member refers I understand the alleged offence may have occurred in the City of London.

Rape

37. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further actions he proposes to seek to reduce the incidence of the crime of rape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 13 April at column 145.

Police Cells (Remanded Persons)

39. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were being held on remand in police cells on Monday 18 April.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Monday 18 April 1,161 male prisoners, most of whom would have been on remand, were held in police cells in England and Wales; no women were being held.

Fines (Non-payment)

40. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of non-payment of fines were before the courts in 1987 and 1980.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not recorded centrally.

Pensioners (TV Licences)

42. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now introduce legislation providing free television licences for all pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There are no plans to do so.

Football Matches (Policing Costs)

43. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to provide information on those policing costs of football matches which are not recouped from the clubs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. It is for chief officers of police to decide, in the light of local circumstances, how many police officers should be deployed outside the ground at football matches. Information on the costs of providing this service could not be collected centrally without disproportionate cost.

Immigration (Correspondence)

47. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on what recent steps he has taken to reduce delays in dealing with immigration and nationality department correspondence.

48. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to reduce the amount of time his Department takes to answer letters from right hon. and hon. Members and to reduce the delays at Lunar House.

Mr. Renton: With regard to the delay at Lunar house, I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to my reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 19 April at column 410.

West Midlands (Chief Constable)

49. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief constable of the west midlands; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State visited the West Midlands police on 11 December 1987, and my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State visited the force on 25 February. On each occasion a number of policing matters were discussed with the chief constable.

14-year-old Boys (Custody)

50. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criminal justice policy objectives are secured by keeping 14-year-old boys in penal custody; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The courts must have the powers they need to deal suitably with offenders. It is desirable to use non-custodial disposals for offenders under 17 whenever possible. However, some juveniles, including a number of 14-year-old boys, commit serious offences for which in the last resort, only a custodial sentence is an adequate punishment.

Sunday Trading

51. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received since April 1986 favouring a liberalisation of Sunday trading; what evidence he has concerning the inconsistent enforcement of the existing law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Between 15 April 1986 and 12 April 1988 we received 512 written representations, broadly in favour of liberalisation. We have some evidence on the pattern of enforcement in the country, but it is incomplete. I understand, however, that my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has asked the Association of District Councils to obtain an authoritative picture of the enforcement effort undertaken by local authorities.

Dog Fights

52. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priority he accords, in his overall policy towards law and order, to the elimination of illegal dog fights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government share the public abhorrence of the barbaric practice of dog fighting. We therefore supported the Protection of Animals (Penalties) Act 1987 increasing the maximum penalties available for these and other offences against animals, and are supporting the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bill to increase substantially the maximum penalties for attendance at animal fights or baiting.

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

53. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend last met the Commissioner, together with representatives of the London local authority associations, on Tuesday 19 April when they discussed his strategy for 1988.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report details of the byelaws which have been made by local planning authorities under the Public Health Act 1961 in respect of amusement arcades; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: To date, only Westminster city council has made byelaws specifically to regulate amusement arcades. These were confirmed on 24 August 1987. We will shortly be consulting the local authority associations and the amusements industry on a scheme of model byelaws which it is proposed to issue for adoption by other district and borough councils.

Passports

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what complaints his Department has received concerning the telephones at the passport office in (a) London and (b) Peterborough being constantly engaged; what steps are being taken to provide more telephone lines and staff in order to reduce waiting times for renewal of passports; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the average length of time now occurring between a United Kingdom passport being received in (a) the London office and (b) Peterborough and its being renewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Correctly completed, non-urgent passport applications of all types are being dealt with within 54 working days at the London passport office and within 28 days at Peterborough. Urgent applications are given priority.

The difficulty of contacting passport offices by telephone is a frequent source of complaint. New telephone systems, with additional exchange lines for incoming calls, were installed at both London and Peterborough during 1987, and use is made at both offices of recorded message facilities to enable more calls to be handled. However, the number of calls received far exceeds the capacity of the systems and the provision of additional telephone lines alone would not solve the problem. Efforts are therefore being directed towards reducing the present delays in handling postal applications. I announced on 31 March in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) at column 679, a number of special measures to help achieve this, including the recruitment of additional staff. Over 30 additional casual staff have since been recruited at the London office. At Peterborough, where space is limited, an additional 10 staff are being recruited.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Mr. and Mrs. David Guyatt of 134, Shoebury Road, Thorpe Bay, Essex, who submitted a passport application, ref. 2/0402/03, on 3 February, have not yet received their passports despite a number of letters and inquiries about the urgency of the case for business purposes; and if he will take steps to ensure that they now receive their passports.

Mr. Renton: The passports were posted on 19 April.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement giving his Department's definition and a full explanation of the phrase "class of firearm" as used in his Department's various letters and circulars concerning the administration of the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department has regard to the ordinary use of the words to which the hon. Member refers and to the relevant provisions of the Firearms Act.

Risley Detention Centre

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A prisoners are at present held on remand at Risley detention centre; to how many strip searches they have been subjected in February and March, giving the number of persons involved, the number of times each person was searched and if any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while a search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search under each of the following headings: (a) making a remand appearance at court, (b) attending a trial, (c) inter-prison visit and (d) other reasons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 19 April, there were seven inmates on remand at Risley remand centre who had been placed in category A. Comprehensive records of strip searches are available only in respect of category A women prisoners, of whom there was one in Risley on the date in question. This prisoner was strip-searched on 14 occasions in February and on four occasions in March in connection with her appearances at remand hearings; and on five occasions in February and on three occasions in March following visits. No unauthorised article was discovered on any of these occasions. On no occasion did the prisoner refuse to be strip-searched.

Durham Prison

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A women prisoners there were in Her Majesty's prison, Durham, in February and March, respectively; and how many strip searches were made on these prisoners in that month, indicating strip searches before and after consultation with legal advisers, after visits and after cell changes, wing searches and cell searches, and listing reasons why the searches were carried out and any illegal contraband or smuggled items found.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During February and March, there were three category A women prisoners in Durham prison. The number of occasions on which each was strip searched during each month is shown in the table:

	Inmate A		Inmate B		Inmate C
	February	March	February	March	February	March
After legal visits
After other visits		2		3	1

	Inmate A		Inmate B		Inmate C
	February	March	February	March	February	March
At the time of cell change and wing and cell searches	1	1	1	1	1	1
Other	—	—	—	—	—	2

No unauthorised article was found on any of the three women. I set out the reasons for such searches in my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 15 January at column 446.

David Garton

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what correspondence he has received from Burton Copeland, solicitors on behalf of David Garton, a remand prisoner at Strangeways prison, Manchester; when the letters were received and when replies were sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received five letters from Messrs. Burton Copeland dated respectively 15 and 28 January, 4 and 18 February and 17 March. All were delivered within a few days of posting. They were all acknowledged on receipt, and a substantive reply was sent on 20 April. I very much regret they were not answered sooner.

PRIME MINISTER

EC (Surplus Food and Wine)

Q37. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the current level of expenditure on disposing of surplus food and wine stocks; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Good progress is being made on translating into legal texts the agreements reached at the last European Council for bringing budget discipline into the agricultural sector.

NATO

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), 4 March, Official Report, column 1286, if she will indicate what role conventional weapons play in North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and United Kingdom defences.

The Prime Minister: NATO has to be able to respond to a threat at any level and strong conventional forces are an essential part of its ability to do so.

Royal Family (Security)

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the steps taken to ensure that adequate security arrangements are made for the safety of members of the Royal Family when they are passing through the middle east by air or landing for refuelling; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that the greatest care is taken to ensure the safety of members of the Royal Family on all overseas visits.

Cyprus

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer on Cyprus by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 18 April, Official Report, column 298, if she will give examples of the good will gestures by all the parties which she put to the Prime Minister of Turkey.

The Prime Minister: My discussions with the Turkish Prime Minister were of course confidential. But the right hon. Gentleman will be aware from his recent contacts with the leaders of both sides in Cyprus of the sorts of gestures which will meet each side's concerns about security and other matters.

Engagements

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 April.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 April.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Doctors and Dentists (Pay)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the latest report by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 9 February 1988, c. 135]: I am now in a position to make a statement on the latest reports of the pay review bodies. The 1988 reports of the review bodies on the pay of Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors, and Professions Allied to Medicine, the Doctors and Dentists, and the Armed Forces, and of the Top Salaries Review Body, have been published today. Copies are now available in the Vote Office. The Government are grateful to members of the review bodies for these reports and the time and care which they have put into their preparation.

The following table shows the increases in pay rates recommended by the review bodies, and their cost:

Review Body Reports	Average increase per cent.	Range of increase per cent.	Cost[1] £ million
Nurses, midwives and health visitors	15·3	[2]4·2 to 33·6	803
Professions allied to medicine	8·8	7·6 to 9·5	45
Doctors and dentists	7·9	[3]7·3 to 8·1	318
Armed Forces	6·4	2·5 to 7·3	232

Review Body Reports	Average increase per cent.	Range of increase per cent.	Cost[1] £ million
Senior civil servants and senior officers of the armed forces	5·4	5·2 to 5·5	5·5
Judiciary	7·4	[45]·3 to 11·9

The increases recommended for nursing staff, midwives and health visitors include implementation in the autumn of a radical new grading structure to provide more attractive career prospects and proper recognition of qualifications, skills and responsibilities for staff directly involved in patient care. The review body's recommendations are on the basis that there should be an immediate interim payment of 4 per cent. from 1 April 1988 and that once the new structure has been introduced, consequential pay increases would be backdated to 1 April 1988.

The Government have decided to accept in full the review body's recommendations on nursing staff, midwives and health visitors. They have also decided that the increases recommended by the review bodies on the pay of Professions Allied to Medicine, Doctors and Dentists and the Armed Forces should be paid in full from 1 April 1988. The recommendations of the Top Salaries Review Body will be implemented as to 4 per cent. from 1 April 1988, with the balance from 1 October 1988.

The full cost of the awards for the Armed Forces Pay Review Body and Top Salaries Review Body groups will be met from within existing public expenditure programme totals for this year. In the case of the health service groups the Government have decided that the cost in excess of the allocation already made for this year should be met from the Reserve. They will provide an extra £749 million from the Reserve within the planned total of public expenditure for this year, of which £683 million will be added to health authority cash limits. The remaining £66 million is for the family practitioner services. Together with the increases in allocation already announced, the increase in provision for the National Health Service in 1988-89 over 1987-88 will therefore be £1,852 million.

The pay rates and scales resulting from the decisions will be promulgated as soon as possible for all the groups concerned. Pensions will be based on the salaries actually in payment in accordance with the principle set out in my written answer of 13 April 1984, at column 383.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Revenue

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of Government revenue in 1985-86 and 1986-87 was raised from individuals or companies resident in tax districts in the north of England.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Income Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will show for 1988-89 those ranges of earnings within which the burden of income tax plus national insurance is less than in 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: The percentage of income taken in income tax and national insurance contributions is lower in 1988-89 than in 1978-79 at all levels of earnings except those shown in the table. Average earnings are those for men in all occupations who work a full week and whose pay is unaffected by absence (estimated at £92·80 per week in 1978-79 and £244·70 per week in 1988-89).

Earnings where average rates of tax and national insurance contributions are higher in 1988-89 than in 1978-79
Percentages of average earnings
Married man wife not earning—17 to 19 and 29 to 67.
Single person—17 to 19, 29 to 38 and 43 to 52.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the amount of inheritance tax paid by tax units on marginal rates of income tax of (a) 60 per cent., (b) 55 per cent., (c) 50 per cent. and (d) 45 per cent. in 1987-88 and the projected amount of inheritance tax receipts for each of these categories in 1988-89 together with the amounts forgone as a result of the 1988-89 budget changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 April 1988]: I regret that this information is not available.

Political Parties

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year since 1979 the number of transfers to political parties made on or within one year of death where the sum involved was (a) between £50,000 and £100,000 and (b) in excess of £100,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Details of transfers to political parties are not separately recorded, so it is not possible to give for any year the number of such transfers or the amounts involved.

ENERGY

Eastcroft District Heating Scheme, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply of 12 April, what his Department has done in the past to encourage the Eastcroft district heating scheme in Nottingham.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Eastcroft scheme has been in operation for some 15 years and is well-established. In 1986 my Department was informed of problems faced by tenants served by the scheme and was asked to support an investigation. Such a study would have added little to the existing knowledge of CHP in general. However, the operators were advised that grant aid might be available, under the energy efficiency survey scheme, towards certain of the costs involved. Nottingham city council has now applied for a grant under this scheme and its application is being considered.

Bradwell Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of the findings of the nuclear installations inspectorate's long-term safety of the Bradwell nuclear power station, and of the design similarities with the Berkeley No. 1 reactor, he will direct the Central Electricity Generating Board not to recommence operation of that reactor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Health and Safety Executive published its report on the findings of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's assessment of the CEGB's long-term safety review on Berkeley nuclear power station on 13 April 1988. The safety case for continued operation of the Berkeley reactors was assessed on its own merits and in the knowledge of the findings on Bradwell. The report generally confirms the adequacy of the existing safety case and raises no specific concern such that reactor operations cannot continue at present.

British Gas

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the cost to (a) the Government and (b) British Gas of having to buy back shares where a final instalment is not paid.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The cost of making repayments to investors in cases where the instalment is not paid will be met out of proceeds from reselling the shares in question on the market. There will therefore be no net cost to either British Gas or the Government.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many shareholders are there in British Gas (a) who have paid the final instalment and (b) who have not paid the final instalment.

Mr. Peter Morrison: On Sunday 17 April, some three quarters of the 2·85 million payments had been received. Considerable numbers have been coming in since.

WALES

Road Signs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the total public expenditure on road signs on trunk roads and motorways in Wales in each year since 1966 at outturn and 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available. Expenditure is incurred either as part of individual road scheme costs or as part of maintenance costs.

Pedestrian Bridge (Sandbank Road, Towyn Level Crossing)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet urgently the chairman of British Rail to discuss the reasons for the delay in installing the pedestrian bridge at the Sandbank road, Towyn level crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. This is a matter for British Rail.

Rural Schools

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further steps he proposes to take to encourage small rural schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I continue to be concerned that we should maintain and improve the quality of education in rural areas of Wales. The Government have given specific help, through education support grant, to improve the quality and range of curriculum provided in rural schools. The measures included in the Education Reform Bill are intended to improve the quality of education in all schools, including small rural ones, and my right hon. Friend will be monitoring the effects of its implementation. It is for local education authorities to determine in the context of falling school rolls how to preserve and enhance the quality of education in rural areas. My right hon. Friend has consulted the Welsh Joint Education Committee and the Welsh Counties Committee about a draft circular on "Educational Quality in Wales" which covers these matters among others; he is now considering their comments.

Education Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the Welsh working group for the national curriculum.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am pleased to announce that the professor of Welsh at the University college of North Wales, Professor Gwyn Thomas, has accepted the chairmanship of the group. Full membership will be announced shortly. A copy of the group's terms of reference has been placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what international obligations and undertakings restrict Her Majesty's Government's policy on promoting the export of computer technology to South African companies and institutions; and what information he has on comparable limitations accepted by other European Economic Community member states and the United States of America.

Mr. Alan Clark: In line with our EC and Commonwealth partners, the United Kingdom does not permit exports of computer equipment and other sensitive equipment to South African military, police or security forces; but, in accordance with our undertakings, we neither prevent nor discourage legitimate civil exports of computer technology to South Africa. Under the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act 1986, the United States has imposed a prohibition on the exports of computer equipment to certain entities of the Government of South Africa.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps his Department is taking to persuade the Korean authorities to allow bottled-in-Scotland Scotch whisky to be imported and available within the Korean domestic market.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Korean market is not fully open to exports of bottled-in-Scotland Scotch whisky. We press the Korean authorities on every suitable occasion, both bilaterally and through the EC, to remove the restrictions in this important sector. The Korean authorities have recently undertaken to liberalise the market as from 1 July 1989. We welcome this undertaking and are seeking full details of the proposed measures.

Postal Services (Industrial Disputes)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how often industrial disputes have disrupted postal deliveries in the London postal districts during each of the last five years.

Mr. Butcher: Disruption to postal services from industrial disputes is primarily a matter for the Post Office Board. I do not have details of the position in London over the last five years. However, I have asked the chairman of the Post Office to write to my hon. Friend.

Working Breakfasts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to invite the hon. Member for Newham North-West to the next working breakfast at which inner-city policy for London will be discussed; when and where that breakfast will take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The London action for cities working breakfast will take place at the Business Design Centre, Islington Green, on Wednesday 22 June. The presentations are aimed at business men and are carefully designed to encourage business participation in the regeneration of our cities. Space is limited and we seek to ensure that the audience consists only of business men, and those officials of public agencies directly involved in working with the private sector. I am afraid that it is not my intention to invite the hon. Member to attend, as the only effect would be to displace a business representative.

Royal Arms

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, why the Royal Arms no longer appear on the official notepaper of his office.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My official notepaper has been redesigned as part of a major exercise to improve communication between the DTI and business. This exercise is in support of the new objectives of the DTI set out in the White Paper "DTI – the department for Enterprise" which I presented to Parliament on 12 January 1988.

Regional Development Organisations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give a breakdown of payments for 1988-89 for regional development organisations by region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire South-West (Mr. Page) on 11 March 1988 at columns 369-71.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the percentage of European Regional Development Fund moneys going to the different standard regions in the previous five years for which information is available; and if he will give similar projections for such future periods for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: The table sets out the percentage distribution of European regional development fund commitments during the period 1983 to 1987:

Region	1983	1984	1985	1986	[1]1987

Timber

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what advice his Department is giving to retailers, manufacturers, importers, architects, local authorities and other institutional users of tropical woods about the use of wood from unsustainable sources;

(2) if there are any plans to implement a code of conduct on the importation of non-sustainably produced tropical timber; and what initiatives are being taken to regulate the international trade in tropical timber;

(3) what action has been taken to encourage the development of markets for sustainable produced timber products;

(4) what advice his Department is giving to local authorities and other institutional users of tropical woods about the use of wood from unsustainable sources;

(5) what plans there are to support initiatives aimed at regulating the international trade in tropical timber in such a way as to ensure that only timber from sustainable sources is imported into Europe.

Mr. Atkins: The Government believe that solutions to depletion of the tropical rain forests are likely to be found only on a global basis. We have therefore positively supported the International Tropical Timber Organisation (ITTO), whose objectives balance conservation and trade expansion and diversification. We believe that ITTO represents a suitable forum to consider and discuss the wide-ranging and complex issues involved, including the usage of sustainably produced timber. The Government hope that the ITTO will urgently address the questions of sustainable utilisation and management of tropical forests (including achievement of generally accepted definitions in this area).

Israel (Trade)

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current volume of United Kingdom-Israeli trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: For the first two months of 1988 the volume of United Kingdom-Israel trade, measured in value terms, was: exports £64·5 million, imports £79·8 million.

These figures should be treated with more than the usual caution because of major changes to customs procedures introduced in January 1988, details of which were given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West, (Mr. Page) on 7 December 1987, at columns 34-5.

Oil

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much crude oil, expressed in (a) volume and (b) cash terms was imported into the United Kingdom from (i) Iran and (ii) Iraq in each of the last five years; and what proportion of total imports from each country each figure represents.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the following table.

Imports from Iran and Iraq: 1983-87

	Crude Oil Volume thousand metric tonnes	Value in £ million	Total Imports Value in £ million	Crude Oil as percentage of total

Inward Investment

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment has been made of the effectiveness of his Department's inward investment activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 20 April 1988]: The Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) in my Department has a rolling programme of internal assessment for performance and value for money. Paid publicity and promotional material is assessed by independent research by consultants. Consultants are also employed to evaluate particular operational aspects, for example, the activities of the English regional development organisations that are part funded by my Department. The IBB, together with the agencies that it co-ordinates, have been successful and effective, as is shown by the United Kingdom's continuing to be the preferred European location for internationally mobile direct investment.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the number of jobs created in England, Wales and Scotland as a result of investment by United States companies since 1979.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 20 April 1988]: The following are the Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) figures for the number of jobs expected to be created or safeguarded, in the long term, by inward investment projects announced by United States companies in each year since 1979 (the earliest for which formal records are available) for England, Wales and Scotland. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves and include only those jobs associated with inward investment projects currently known to the IBB.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the annual cost of the Invest in Britain Bureau since 1979; and how much of that expenditure was incurred in the United States of America.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 20 April 1988]: The following are the figures for the annual cost of the Invest in Britain Bureau; full costs are available only from the financial year 1986-87.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Disarmament

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the reasons why the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations Special Session on disarmament does not, as in 1978 and 1982, include a member of a non-governmental organisation; and if he will make it his policy to reconsider the position.

Mr. Mellor: There now exists a wider range of non-governmental organisations taking an interest in arms control issues than at the time of the first and second United Nations Special Sessions on Disarmament. Not all these groups share the same views on arms control and disarmament issues. We do not think it would be possible for a member of any one non-governmental organisation to be able to represent the views of all such groups. It would be invidious to try to make such a choice.

We recognise the need for liaison between the United Kingdom delegation and the non-governmental organisations attending the Special Session. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office disarmament adviser, David Summerhayes, will carry out this task. His experience as leader of the United Kingdom delegation to UNSSD II and his contact with the whole range of NGO opinion in this country are particularly relevant to his task.

Lebanon (British Hostages)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to help to secure the release of Mr. Terry Waite, Mr. John McCarthy and other British nationals unaccounted for in Lebanon and who have been taken hostage or kidnapped.

Mr. Mellor: Her Majesty's embassy in Beirut is doing all it can, in very difficult circumstances, to acquire information on the British hostages in Lebanon. We are also in touch with middle eastern and other Governments who might be able to help.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will issue guidance on the provisions he would expect to be contained in the planning and delegation schemes for further education which local education authorities will be required to prepare under clause 121 of the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am today issuing draft guidance on the provisions which I would expect to be contained in the schemes which local education authorities would be required to prepare under clause 121 of the Education Reform Bill if it receive Royal Assent in its present form. The draft guidance is being issued now in order to inform discussion of the further education clauses during the remaining stages of the Bill's passage through Parliament: to help local education authorities, colleges and others to prepare for the introduction of the further education planning, budget-setting and delegation procedures envisaged by the Bill; and to give all concerned an early opportunity to comment.

Copies of the draft guidance have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. They are also being sent to local education authorities, further and higher education colleges, and a range of interested bodies, with a request for any comments by 15 July 1988.

THE ARTS

Lindow Man

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many individuals and organisations contacted him about Lindow Man; and how many of these argued the case for a location in the south-eastern region.

Mr. Luce: I was contacted about Lindow Man by 23 individuals and one organisation, all from the north-west. None argued the case for location in the south-east.

SCOTLAND

Michael Forsyth Ltd. and Michael Forsyth Associates

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all contacts by (a) Ministers in his Department and (b) civil servants in his Department with representatives of Michael Forsyth Ltd., Michael Forsyth Associates and subsidiaries thereof, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Rifkind: No Minister currently serving in the Scottish Office has had any official meetings with representatives of Michael Forsyth Ltd., Michael Forsyth Associates or any subsidiaries since taking up office. Nor have any of my officials had such a meeting in the last five years. Information about possible meetings with previous Scottish Office Ministers is not readily available.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to collect centrally information on the waiting time for cervical smear test results in each laboratory in every health board in Scotland; what steps are taken to achieve consistency in this regard both within and between health boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As part of the monitoring of the introduction of a comprehensive cervical cancer screening programme in Scotland, I am arranging for this information to be collected centrally.

Electoral Register

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report, using population changes for those aged 17 and over, the 1986 forecast of the expected percentage change of the number of people on the electoral register in Scotland for 1987-88.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest available projection is 1985-based and shows a change of plus 0·28 per cent. between mid-1987 and mid-1988 for the population of Scotland aged 17 and over.

Local Authorities (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement regarding the rejection by his Department's finance division of Grampian regional council's social work committee's request for an additional allocation to the region's capital programme in respect of voluntary-funded improvements to the regional council's homes for the elderly at Durnhythe, Portsoy and Rose Innes, Aberchirder;

(2) what criteria his Department uses when requiring funds from voluntary sources to be counted as part of local authorities' capital plans.

Mr. Lang: The rules as to the counting of capital expenditure by local authorities against the allocations issued to them are set out in guidance issued annually by my Department. In broad terms, capital expenditure incurred by local authorities must count against allocations, no matter how that expenditure is financed.

In circumstances such as those referred to there may be more than one way to achieve the desired result. I do not know why Grampian regional council has apparently chosen not to use such flexibility as is built into the system. My Department has written to remind it of the possibilities. I therefore see no case for issuing an additional capital allocation to the authority for these projects, and in any case the resources for 1988-89 have all been issued.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the last five years his Department has required that the costs of improvements to regional council homes met from funds from voluntary sources should be counted as part of the council's capital plan; and if he will give a breakdown by region.

Mr. Lang: The Government's rules covering capital expenditure by local authorities issued annually by my Department are set out in general terms and do not specify every eventuality. While my Department is ready to give advice on specific points, it is for authorities to satisfy themselves and their auditors that the rules are adhered to. Authorities' returns do not identify capital expenditure financed from voluntary sources.

Sporting Facilities

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of sporting facilities available to schoolchildren and youth clubs (i) in Scotland, (ii) in Strathclyde and (iii) in Glasgow; and how many of these are indoor facilities for swimming, tennis, gymnastics and athletics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Comprehensive information about facilities in the public education sector is not recorded centrally. The Scottish Sports Council has recorded the following information about indoor facilities open to the public in Scotland.

Facilities purpose built for:	Scotland	Strathclyde	Glasgow
Swimming	135	60	16
Tennis	1	1	1
Athletics	1	1	1
Gymnastics	4	2	0
General purpose sports centres	59	24	5

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of road accidents resulting in deaths or serious injuries for each year since 1975 (a) in Scotland, (b) in the Strathclyde region and (c) in Glasgow.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Procurator Fiscal v. McAvennie, Roberts, Butcher and Woods

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the number of man-hours in (a) the Solicitor-General's office, (b) the Glasgow procurator fiscal's office and (c) of police time devoted to the case of Procurator Fiscal v. Messrs. McAvennie, Roberts, Butcher and Woods.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The estimated number of man-hours devoted to this case, including time spent in court and in responding to media and parliamentary interest, were as follows:

	Number
(a) Crown Office	7
(b) Procurator Fiscal's office, Glasgow	74
(c) Police	218

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the cost to public funds of the trial involving the Procurator Fiscal of Glasgow v. Messrs. McAvennie, Roberts, Butcher and Woods.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to quantify the costs involved.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will state the number of retirement pensioners (a) aged between 65 and 79 years and (b) aged 80 years and over who both pay income tax and receive housing benefit;

Michael Forsyth Ltd.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all contacts by (a) Ministers in his Department and (b) civil servants in his Department with representatives of Michael Forsyth Ltd., Michael Forsyth Associates and subsidiaries thereof, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Portillo: I have no knowledge of any contact at ministerial level with representatives of any of these companies. Civil servants in the Department had contacts with M. Forsyth Associates in 1983 and 1984 concerning routine national insurance contributions matters. There may have been other contacts with any of the companies on routine social security business during the five years, but no details are available.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why Ministers have not yet approved for issue his Department's guidance for the organisation of the National Health Service in war; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Ministers have already considered draft guidance on National Health Service responsibilities in civil defence and have asked for some amendments; an amended text has been considered by the Home Office, which has a co-ordinating role in emergency planning, and its advice will be taken into account in a further submission to Ministers.

Disabled People

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many persons were registered as disabled on 31 December 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; and how many of those aged between 16 and 65 years were (a) in full-time employment, (b) in part-time employment, (c) registered as unemployed and (d) known to the Department not to be in employment;

(2) how many persons registered as disabled, but not in employment, were in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit, (b) sickness and invalidity benefit, (c) supplementary benefit and (d) free prescriptions on each of 31 December 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Scott: The available information on the numbers of persons registered as disabled with local authorities in England (for the years specified) is set out in the table. I regret that the remaining information requested is not collected centrally. Figures for the rest of Great Britain are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Blind or partially sighted	1986	191,652	41,304
Deaf or hard of hearing	1986	97,431	33,149

[1] All figures as at 31 March.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost to his Department of giving free prescriptions for persons registered as disabled but who do not qualify under the present regulations.

Mr. Newton: The information needed to make a reliable estimate is not available.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holidays and/or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's central office at Newcastle operates a scheme of finding day-care parents for employees' children. It also runs holiday play schemes for employees' children in the Easter and summer holidays. Child care provision is one of the areas being examined in a review of opportunities available to women employees in the Department.

Elderly People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Monklands, West on 15 March, Official Report, column 552, if he will provide information on what proportions of elderly people aged 75-plus years, and what proportions of those aged 85-plus years are (a) housebound, (b) bedfast, (c) unable to negotiate stairs independently, (d) unable to bath, shower or wash all over alone, and (e) unable to go to the toilet unaided.

Mrs. Currie: The most recent information available is from the 1985 general household survey. Among those aged 75 and over, and 85 and over, included in the sample inverviewed for the survey, it showed the proportion of people who:

	Aged 75 and over Percentage	Aged 85 and over Percentage

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Nurse Teachers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of Friday 18 March regarding the shortfall of nurse teachers, whether his Department has access to data and figures collected by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting on the shortfall in nurse teachers.

Mr. Newton: Information published by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting shows the number of nurse teachers in post at 31 March 1987. It does not show the number of vacancies or shortfalls in nurse teachers.

Senior Doctors

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each regional health authority the number of senior doctors per 100,000 in-patients treated for each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Quality-adjusted Life Years System

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Government have taken up the quality-adjusted life years system in regard to hospital treatment of patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The QALY (quality adjusted life year) is a qualitative measure of health which is being developed experimentally in various centres, mainly for evaluating new medical techniques. No consensus has yet emerged on its general use in making decisions about the treatment of patients. Any use made by the Department of QALYs would have been only as one among a variety of factors to be taken into account.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress is being made with the review of the pay and grading of medical laboratory scientific officers; and when it will report.

Mr. Newton: I understand that at a meeting on 19 April the management side of the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council put proposals for a new grade structure for medical laboratory scientific officers to the staff side. Further meetings have been arranged.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 15 April, Official Report, column 264, if he will make it his policy in future to publish the reasons for each award of a performance related payment, whilst preserving the anonymity of individual recipients; if he will give this information in respect of 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: All managers eligible for performance-related pay are subject to an annual performance review. The Department's circular PM(86)11 defines five levels of performance for this purpose and specifies the percentage additions that may be paid to managers rated in each of the higher bands. The detailed reasons for particular awards will reflect the different objectives set for individual managers and we have no plans to publish them.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the district health authorities whose information-gathering ability has been responsible for the delay in his publishing the hospital waiting list figures for September 1987.

Member for Clydesdale of 17 March, Official Report, column 679, there is a specific record of transactions with the British Oxygen Company held by each of the area boards of the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: Individual NHS authorities are expected to, and do, maintain records of their transactions with contractors, including British Oxygen Company. No central record of all such transactions is maintained.

Social Workers (Law Teaching)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the standard of the teaching of law on courses leading to the certificate of qualification in social work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I am aware of the concern about the standard of teaching of the law content of qualifying training courses for social workers as evidenced in the research report issued this month by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work.

The Government made available an additional £250,000 to CCETSW last autumn to assist it in achieving improvements in the quality of social work training. As part of the programme of improvements CCETSW has promoted research into the subject and organised a national workshop for all qualifying courses in social work to launch the report and to indicate the improvement required in the teaching and assessment of law.

Registered Homes Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he will take to extend the provisions of the Registered Homes Act to private establishments with less than four residents; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We are considering the proposals in Sir Roy Griffiths' report, "Community Care: Agenda for Action" and Lady Wagner's report, "Residential Care—A Positive Choice" (copies of both of which are in the Library) that residential care homes with fewer than four residents should be subject to registration, and shall make our conclusions known in due course.

Wagner Report

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to make a statement on what action the Government propose to take in the light of Lady Wagner's report on residential care, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Newton: I am unable to add anything to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris), and the hon. Members for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) and for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 8 March 1988 at column 171.

Family Credit

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will set out in the Official Report what steps claimants for family credit, who were in receipt of family income supplement, are expected to take to satisfy his Department that they do not have more than £6,000 in savings, apart from providing details of accounts held by banks, building societies or other financial bodies.

Mr. Portillo: Family income supplement recipients who declared that they had capital worth more than £2,000 were asked to provide evidence by sending in bank statements or account books, and so on. Those who had any property or land (other than the house they lived in) were asked to submit recent evidence of the value if available, and if not to provide the necessary details of the Department to ask the district valuer for a valuation.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on a district health authority in one region taking over responsibility for part of the geographical area of a district health authority in a different region.

Mrs. Currie: District health authority boundaries were established in 1982 after the most careful consultation locally and consideration of all the circumstances bearing on the effective delivery of services to patients. We would apply the same strict criteria to any proposal for changing those boundaries. I understand that a number of health authorities already manage some services on behalf of and within another authority's boundaries. That is a matter for agreement locally.

Debt Counselling

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his staff have been given training in debt counselling; and what guidance has been given to staff when arranging loans under the social fund as to the consideration to be given to other debts which claimants may have.

Mr. Portillo: Social fund officers receive training which includes money advice. In addition guidance on money advice is contained in part 9 of the social fund manual, which has been published. Guidance on the consideration to be given to other debts is contained in parts 3, 4 and 5 of the social fund manual.

Family Support

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the trends in spending since 1986 on (a) targeted and (b) untargeted financial support for families with children; and how they are expected to develop from April.

60. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much (a) was spent in 1986-87, (b) will be spent in 1987-88, and (c) is expected to be spent in 1988-89 on providing financial assistance to families with children.

Mr. Scott [holding anwer 8 March 1988]: It is estimated that in 1986-87 around £5 billion was spent on families with children through income-related benefits (covering the needs of the parents as well as of the children themselves) and around £5 billion in non-income-related benefits (principally child benefit). Comparable figures for later years are not available.

"Family Fortunes"

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the work by the Central Statistical Office which contains reservations concerning the findings of the "Family Fortunes" report produced by the Family Policy Study Centre.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 31 March 1988]: The Central Statistical Office is not the responsibility of this Department, but I understand that the director will be shortly placing in the Library the information requested.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people were in receipt of severe disablement allowance at the latest date for which figures are available; what was the breakdown of this total by (a) age and (b) cause of incapacity for work;

(2) how many people are receiving severe disablement allowance as a result of (a) mental handicap (b) severe mental handicap.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Separate information is not available on the numbers who are receiving severe disablement allowance as a result of mental handicap or severe mental handicap. These cases are included in Table 2 under 'mental disorders'.

The information as at 5 April 1986 is as follows:

Table 1

NORTHERN IRELAND

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if residents in private nursing homes are entitled to a weekly personal allowance from pension-Department of Health and Social Security payments.

Mr. Needham: Residents in private nursing homes who are eligible to receive retirement pension are paid the full weekly rate of pension to which they are entitled.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry, in February and March, giving the number of persons involved and number of times each person was searched and if any prison contraband, smuggled item, or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search under each of the following headings: (a) making a remand appearance at court, (b) attending trial, (c) inter-prison visit, and (d) other reasons.

Mr. Stanley: The information requested is as follows:

	February	March
Number of searches
Total number of searches carried out	34	33
Total number of inmates searched	24	25
Number of prisoners searched once	17	17

No prohibited article was found during these searches and no prisoners refused to be searched.

Air Pollution

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the dangers that can be caused by the discharge of an excessive level of sulphur dioxide into the atmosphere over Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 April 1988]: Monitoring of the levels of sulphur dioxide at various sites in Northern Ireland over many years has shown that these are within the international health criteria published by the World Health Organisation and the European Community.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the dangers that can be caused by the discharge of an excessive level of heavy metals into the atmosphere over Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 April 1988]: A survey carried out in the late 1970s by the Warren Spring laboratory of the Department of Trade and Industry showed that the levels of heavy metals sampled in the atmosphere in Northern Ireland were within the relevant criteria published for the protection of health. The nature of the Northern Ireland Industrial base means that levels of heavy metals discharged into the atmosphere are not a cause for concern.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment is made by his Department of the level of heavy metals discharged into the atmosphere over Northern Ireland annually from the burning of fossil fuels by electricity generating stations in England and Wales; what are the levels for the remaining discharge of heavy metals; and what is treated as a safe level.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 April 1988]: None. Monitoring of the effects of such discharges from the specific sources mentioned is neither practical nor necessary in view of the pattern of prevailing winds. As indicated in my reply to an earlier question from the hon. Member, the levels of certain heavy metals in the atmosphere in Northern Ireland are not a cause for concern.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measurements are made by his Department to assess the emissions of sulphur dioxide into the atmosphere in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 April 1988]: Continuous monitoring to assess the levels of sulphur dioxide and particulates in the atmosphere in Northern Ireland is undertaken by district councils and Northern Ireland Electricity. The results are published annually by the Warren Spring laboratory of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Public Appointments

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will now, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. McCusker) of 9 March, Official Report, column 230, and the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 22 March, publish a table in the Official Report to show how many of the 39 persons suggested by the Government of the Irish Republic for public appointments in Northern Ireland were first suggested in (a) 1985, (b) 1986, (c) 1987 and (d) 1988; and, in each of these years, how many were appointed to (i) the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights, (ii) the Fair Employment Agency, (iii) the Equal Opportunities Commission, (iv) the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, (v) the Police Complaints Board and (vi) other bodies;

(2) if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 22 March, he will indicate how many of the persons suggested through the Anglo-Irish Secretariat are United Kingdom citizens; and how many of the persons suggested were born in the Irish Republic.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 29 March 1988]: No names were proposed this way in 1985; 34 were proposed in 1986, four in 1987 and two so far this year. Records of persons willing to serve on public bodies do not routinely include details of their citizenship or places of birth and information on these matters could be collected only at disproportionate cost. As I said in a reply to the hon. Gentleman on 22 March at column 81, all those proposed are resident in Northern Ireland.

As I also said in that reply, it is not my practice to publish details of individuals so appointed.

DEFENCE

Exercise JMC 88-2

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what activity will take place at Stornoway airport during Exercise JMC 88-2.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None is planned.

Northern Ireland Frontier Army Battalion

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the creation of a new Northern Ireland Frontier Army Battalion will have on (a) part-time Ulster Defence Regiment members in the area concerned and (b) full-time Ulster Defence Regiment personnel deployable along the frontier.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The planned formation of the additional brigade headquarters in Northern Ireland will not entail any changes to the present strengths of the part-time or permanent cadre UDR. However, there will be a number of changes in the deployment of both Regular Army and UDR units. It is not the policy to disclose such operational deployments.

Sea-launched Cruise Missiles

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Ministers about the possible deployment of further sea-launched cruise missiles.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 23 February, at column 165.

US Air Force Northern Europe Tracking Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each of the locations in the United Kingdom that are in use, or are planned to be in use for the United States air force northern Europe tracking station project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: RAE Oakhanger is the only United Kingdom site currently planned to be used for this purpose.

Ali Baba Oil Platform (Army Helicopter)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the exercise in October 1987 involving Army helicopters operating from the oil platform Ali Baba in the Cromarty Firth.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In October 1987 Army helicopters from the TA Army Air Corps squadron practised deck landings on the Ali Baba oil platform as part of their annual training camp. The aim of the exercise was to test navigation and flying skills under realistic conditions.

Low Frequency Transmitter (Glen Garry)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place notice of proposed development with the Highland regional council relating to the establishment of a trial extremely low frequency transmitter in Glen Garry.

Mr. Sainsbury: On present planning it is unlikely that a notice of proposed development will be submitted to the regional council before the autumn of this year.

Aircrew (Medical Checks)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to procedures for medical checks on Royal Air Force aircrew following the findings of the inquest into the death of Flight Lieutenant Ian Hill on 24 June 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Blood tests undertaken at periodic medical examinations have been revised to include cholesterol, triglyceride and thyroid stimulating hormone; on initial selection, at age 35, and five yearly thereafter. In addition, specific policy instructions for the interpretation of PME blood tests have been produced, and are about to be issued to all RAF medical officers, identifying levels at which further investigation is required.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that no representatives of Government with United Nations records of human rights abuse are invited to the British Army equipment exhibition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Invitations to the British Army equipment exhibition are considered on a case-by-case basis with all relevant factors taken into account. An invitation does not, of course, imply that we are prepared to authorise the sale of any particular item of equipment on display.

Ammunition (Storage)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that no ammunition or explosives should be stored in, or close to, populated areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 10 April 1988]: It is our general policy to locate ammunition and explosives depots in areas of low population, but this is not possible in all cases, not least because of the encroachment of buildings towards the defence estate. However, the storage of ammunition and explosives is kept under constant review and stringent rules are enforced to ensure maximum safety.

ENVIRONMENT

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the figures indicating how his Department assesses the cost of (a) retaining each job and (b) creating each new job in enterprise zones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My answer to the hon. Member on 2 March described the method of assessing the cost of each net additional job in enterprise zones in Great Britain. The estimated cost at the end of 1986 of £8,500 for each net additional job was derived from the total costs to the Exchequer of £297 million and a total number of net additional jobs of 35,060.

The net additional jobs due to the enterprise zones include both jobs new to the zones and those jobs in firms that were present at designation and retained as a result of the zones, but separate estimates have not been made for each category.

Housing (Haringey)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the house building figures in the Haringey borough council area in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector, on the latest available date, and for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Roe: The reported house building figures up to 1986 appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics" which are available in the Library:

	Issue No.	Table No.
1979	59	4*(b)*
	53	7[1]
1980-83	73	1*(b)* to (e) 3*(b)*, (c)[1]
1984	77	1*(b)*
1985	81	1*(b)*
1986	82	1*(b)*

[1] House building in Haringey by GLC and housing associations assisted by GLC, recorded separately.

Haringey has not yet made returns for October to December 1987, but the figures for January to September are:—

	Starts	Completions
Local authority	52	0
Housing associations	46	180
Public sector	98	180
Private sector	128	137
All	226	317

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of registered homeless people in the Haringey borough council area on the latest available date; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Roe: The numbers of households for whom Haringey reported accepting responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of Housing Acts, in each year from 1981 to 1986, appear in a table which was placed in the Library in May 1987.

Corresponding information for 1979, 1980 and the first half of 1987 appears in "Local Housing Statistics" which is also available in the Library:

	Issue number	Table number
1979 first and second halves	54	14
1980 first half	59	9
second half	62	13
1987 first quarter	82	9a
second quarter	83	9

Haringey has not yet reported the figures for the second half of 1987 to the Department.

A new reporting system was introduced for London boroughs in the third quarter of 1982, so that figures are not directly comparable over the whole period.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of people on council house waiting lists in the Haringey borough council area on the latest available date; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Roe: The number of households on waiting lists at April, and the changes in the previous 12 months, appear in columns B51 and B53, respectively, of the 1986 and 1987 housing investment programme "All items prints" which are available in the Library. Information for earlier years is not available centrally.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision for school holiday and/or after school care is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Ridley: An experimental child care scheme was held at the Cardington residential training centre for two weeks in August 1987. The Department is considering what scope there is for further provision without continuing subsidy.

Rating Reform

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking clarification of the treatment of riparian rights under the community charge provisions; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Some representations have been received about the rating of riparian rights. We have no proposals to change the existing provisions relating to the liability and assessment of rates in respect of riparian or other sporting rights; they will remain subject to rates and will be charged at the national non-domestic rate poundage.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 28 March to the hon. Member for Copeland, Official Report, column 312, when he expects the estimates to which he refers to be made available.

Mr. Ridley: As soon as I have local authorities budget returns. So far, 335 of 426 have been received. 80 of these appear to contain errors which are being followed up.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are currently employed by the London residuary body.

Mr. Chope: The London residuary body employed 1,993 staff at 1 April 1988. This figure is in full-time equivalents.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the London residuary body to be wound up.

Mr. Chope: The future of the London residuary body is dependent on Parliament's consideration of the Education Reform Bill. It expects to have completed its substantive work in winding up the affairs of the former Greater London council by March 1990.

Rubenstein v. Secretary of State for the Environment

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Lancashire, West of 30 March, Official Report, column 474, if he proposes to appeal against the judgment in the case of Rubenstein v. Secretary of State for the Environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We do not propose to appeal against this judgment, and are considering what line of future action we might take.

Deforestation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take urgent steps to assist in the holding of an international conference on deforestation and the destruction of the ozone layer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department does not consider an international conference to be the most immediately effective way to evaluate recent theories that tropical forest burning may influence the ozone layer. The Montreal protocol on substances which deplete the ozone layer requires that scientific evidence be reassessed before the first review of measures in 1990 and the Department will ensure that the effect of tropical forest burning will be included in that assessment. In addition, I have asked the Department's expert advisory body, the stratospheric ozone review group, to comment on the hypothesis in their next report to the Department, expected this autumn.

Dersingham Bypass

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the letter he has sent to Norfolk county council concerning the route of the Dersingham bypass and its environmental consequences.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department wrote to the chief executive, Norfolk county council on 10 March. The letter referred to a deemed planning permission granted by the county council to itself in February 1987 for the A149 Dersingham-Ingoldisthorpe-Snettisham bypass. The letter stated:

"The Secretary of State considers that it might be expedient, in the wider public interest, for an order to be made under Section 45 of the 1971 Act, revoking the deemed planning permission, in view of the importance of the Dersingham Bog Site of Special Scientific Interest in a national and international context, and the need to ensure that conservation issues are fully and publicly examined.

The Secretary of State accordingly hereby consults the local planning authority, in compliance with section 276(1) of the 1971 Act, as to whether it is expedient that an order should be made. The Department also wishes to know whether, if the Council consider that an order should be made, they would be prepared to make the order themselves."

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will institute a public inquiry into the potential effect to the Dersingham bog site of special scientific interest if the route of the proposed Dersingham bypass as approved by Norfolk county council is followed.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department awaits the county council's response to the consultation letter of 10 March. If the county council objects, the Secretary of State will consider whether he ought to make a revocation order himself. Should he decide to do so, an inquiry would be held into objections to the proposed order including those of the county council. Any inquiry would probably be separate from, but concurrent with, the inquiry into objections to the council's related compulsory purchase and side roads orders.

London City Airport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what part of the planning permission he gave to the operators of London City airport permits experimental flights of jet aircraft to or from that airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The planning permission for London City airport, formerly known as STOLport, does not preclude flights of jet fixed-wing aircraft provided that they are in accordance with the conditions attached to my right hon. Friend's decision of 23 May 1985. Enforcement of these conditions is a matter for the London Docklands development corporation as the development control authority for the area in which the airport lies.

Rents

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the average level (a) of local authority rents and (b) of fair rents registered for unfurnished lettings in England in each of the years from 1979 to 1988, indicating the percentage increase in each on an annual and cumulative basis, showing also the movement of the retail prices index over that same period.

Mr. Ridley: The figures on local authority rents, the average rents registered by rent officers and the movements in the retail prices index up to 1987 are as follows. Corresponding figures are not available for 1988.

Year	Average weekly rents[1] England LA (unrebated) April £	per cent. increase over year	since 1979	Fair rents Unfurnished tenancies[2] 2nd half year £	Retail Prices Index United Kingdom April per cent increase over year	since 1979
1979	6·41	—	—	[3]9·55	—	—
1980	7·70	20	20	[3]11·40	22	22
1981	11·42	48	78	13·00	12	36
1982	13·48	18	110	14·25	9	49
1983	13·97	4	118	15·60	4	55

Year	Average weekly rents[1] England LA (unrebated) April £	per cent. increase over year	since 1979	Fair rents Unfurnished tenancies[2] 2nd half year £	Retail Prices Index United Kingdom April per cent increase over year	since 1979
1984	14·66	5	129	16·80	5	63
1985	15·54	6	142	18·05	7	75
1986	16·36	5	155	19·95	3	80
1987	17·20	5	168	21·19	4	87

[1] service charges, if any, are included in fair rents, but not in local authority rents.
[2] registered rents for private regulated tenancies only.
[3] England and Wales.

The mix of properties for which rents are registered varies from year to year for a number of reasons, for example, extension of decontrol in 1981 and the reduction from three to two years in the minimum period for re-registration which led to re-registrations in 1983 of rents previously registered in 1980 and 1981. Therefore, comparisons of average for consecutive years do not properly reflect rent movements. Better estimates of rent movements are derived from previous and new registered rents for tenancies where there has been no material change in terms or in the physical condition. For properties with rents fixed in the second halves of 1979, 1982, 1984 and 1986, the estimated increases are:

	per cent. increase in period	annualised per cent. increase
1979-82	47	14
1982-84	18	9
1984-86	17	8

The estimated annualised increase for properties with rents fixed in the second half of 1987 was 9 per cent.

Housing Investment Programme

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total of all the housing investment programme bids for 1988-89 submitted by English housing authorities; and what were the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Ridley: In their housing investment programme submissions, local authorities set out their proposals for their total capital expenditure programme in the relevant year. The figures are, therefore, intended to cover not only expenditure financed from allocations, but the very considerable amount of expenditure financed from other sources. The totals of proposed programmes for the years 1978-79 to 1988-89 have been as follows:

Proposed Programmes[1]

	£ millions 1988-89 prices
1978-79	8,493
1979-80	7,091
1980-81	7,078
1981-82	5,203
1982-83	4,562
1983-84	4,462
1984-85	5,381
1985-86	5,516
1986-87	5,943
1987-88	6,011
1988-89	6,167

[1] Excludes non-prescribed expenditure.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the housing investment programme allocations made to each London borough, metropolitan district and non-metropolitan district in each of the years from 1978-79 to 1988-89, expressed in constant 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Ridley: A table listing the housing investment programme allocations made for all housing authorities in England for each of the years from 1978-79 to 1988-89 at 1988-89 constant prices will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to supplement their allocations by expenditure financed from capital receipts. Nationally over half of local authorities' capital expenditure in 1988-89 is expected to be financed from capital receipts.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, following the announcement of the timetable for district and county councils to implement competitive tendering procedures, he will make a statement as to when the other bodies covered by part I of the Local Government Act have to implement competition for their services.

Mr. Chope: In the light of consultation, my right hon. Friend has now considered how competition can be implemented most effectively for these remaining authorities. His decisions reflect their level of activity in the services involved, the application of the £100,000 de minimis threshold and the fact that parish and community councils have had less time than other councils to prepare for competition. He has decided that where they are not exempt under the de minimis threshold, the authorities and bodies listed in the table will be required to expose all their defined activities except ground maintenance to competition by 1 August 1989, and ground maintenance by 1 January 1990:

Metropolitan county fire and civil defence authorities
London Fire and Civil Defence Authorities
Metropolitan county passenger transport authorities
Waste disposal authorities set up by or under the Local Government Act 1985
Joint police authorities
Any joint committee of local authorities
Urban development corporations
The Council of the Isles of Scilly

The Inner London Education Authority is excluded from the list in view of its short remaining life, assuming that the relevant provisions in the Education Reform Bill are enacted. A separate announcement will be made in relation of new town bodies.

Representatives of parish and community councils are being consulted on the proposition that competition should apply to them from 1 January 1990 for ground maintenance and 1 August 1990 for all other activities. Responses have been requested by 31 May.

System-built Houses

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department assesses to be the latest amount needed on each Wimpey no-fines house, in the Blakenhall area of Walsall in order to bring such properties up to acceptable standards.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 18 April 1988]: This is a matter for the local authority, rather than the Department.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the west midlands section of his Department will be willing to see a deputation of residents from the Wimpey no-fines properties in Walsall in order to discuss the present state of disrepair to these houses.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The regional controller and other officials have already visited these houses. I do not feel that a further meeting would be useful. It is for Walsall metropolitan borough council to determine its own priorities for the repair and improvement of its own housing stock.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what latest information and consultations have taken place between his Department and the Walsall metropolitan borough council regarding the work needed to bring up to acceptable standards the Wimpey no-fines properties in the Blakenhall area of the borough.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Officials of the Department discussed this with Walsall metropolitan borough council at the housing investment programme meeting on 16 September 1987. The council also submitted a written bid to the Department in January 1988 for estate action support in 1988-89 for the Blakenhall area, but this was not accepted, for the reasons given in my reply of 18 April to the hon. Member at column 307.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the dangers to residents of the present state of disrepair in the Wimpey no-fines properties in the Blakenhall area of Walsall.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Responsibility for the health and safety of tenants lies with the local authority, both as landlord and through their other statutory powers and responsibilities.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Chelford Market

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the case for additional grading facilities at Chelford market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will reconsider his refusal to grant additional grading facilities at Chelford market; what representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received a number of representations. Grading facilities are provided to allow producers to obtain benefit of the variable premium schemes consistent with the need for efficiency and economy. There are numerous liveweight and deadweight certification facilities in the area and there are no grounds for providing additional facilities at Chelford.

Set-aside and Extensification

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give (a) his Department's and (b) the European Community's definition for (i) set-aside and (ii) extensification.

Mr. Gummer: Definitions applying to all member states including the United Kingdom are contained in a regulation on this subject now awaiting formal adoption by the Council. The regulation defines set-aside as withdrawal from agricultural production of at least 20 per cent. of land devoted to supported arable crops in the reference period for at least five years, with provision for the farmer to opt out after three years. Extensification is defined as reduction of at least 20 per cent. for a period of at least five years in a farmer's output of a surplus agricultural product, without any increase in production capacity for other surplus products.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether a ceiling for the annual or total cost to the European agricultural guarantee and guidance fund of the set-aside scheme was agreed at the European Community's Council meeting of 11 to 13 February.

Mr. Gummer: The European Council agreed that a ceiling of 600 million ECUs should apply in 1992 to expenditure on set-aside and income aids taken together.

Peanuts

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity of peanuts containing aflatoxin levels above one part per billion were imported into Britain in 1987; and if he will list and quantify the uses to which they were put.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria his Department uses in assessing the appropriate levels of aflatoxin permitted in peanuts for (a) human and (b) animal consumption.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The proposed statutory limit of 0·01 mg/kg for aflatoxin in peanuts for human consumption recommended by the independent Food Advisory Committee reflects the policy of reducing aflatoxin contamination to the lowest level that is technologically achievable by good manufacturing practice.

So far as consumption by animals is concerned, maximum limits are set in EC Directives the aims of which include the protection of human and animal health. The levels in feedingstuffs aim to ensure no transference of aflatoxin into milk supplies.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the sampling methods used by his Department in assessing the levels of aflatoxin contained in peanuts imported into Britain.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The sampling plan used by port health authorities to monitor the levels of aflatoxins in peanuts intended for human consumption was designed by the Tropical Products Institute and is published in the Ministry's food surveillance paper No. 18 on mycotoxins, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Slaughterhouse Charges

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the purpose of the EEC directive on the harmonising of slaughterhouse charges in the EEC; what will be the consequence of the proposals for British slaughterhouse charges; whether Her Majesty's Government treat this proposal as falling to be considered under the Single European Act by majority vote; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The purpose of the proposals for harmonising hygiene and inspection charges in slaughterhouses is to remove distortions to competition. As put to the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting on 19 April the proposals were unacceptable to the United Kingdom and I succeeded in persuading the Council that the proposals needed further consideration. The proposals do fall to be determined by qualified majority, but that has nothing to do with changes arising from the Single European Act.

Food Aid

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has yet decided on the arrangements to implement the European Community scheme for distribution of surplus food to the most needy.

Mr. Gummer: On 12 January, my right hon. Friend announced the form of the United Kingdom's participation in the European Community surplus food scheme. The deadline for applications from organisations wishing to participate was 29 February, and the Commission confirmed on 12 April its allocation of £10·4 million (15 million ECUs) to the United Kingdom for 1988. Applications for butter and beef were received from a wide range of organisations, especially from charities. The Government have carefully considered these applications and have designated 127 organisations which are capable of meeting the conditions of the scheme. I am placing a list of designated organisations in the Library.

Individual designated organisations are being informed of the amounts of butter and beef they may withdraw free of charge from intervention stores. Since requests for produce from those organisations have exceeded the Commission's allocation to us by about three times, we have to impose some restrictions. To ensure that the produce is shared as fairly as possible between designated organisations, we have reduced the allocations for those who have requested the highest amount per recipient, and we will take up in the United Kingdom all the butter and beef allowed under the scheme.

Charities and local authorities will make their own arrangements in response to local need and the capacity of their own organisations. Method and timing of distributions will therefore differ throughout the country, and these may take place at any time during the next eight months. Notification will therefore be arranged locally by the organisation concerned.

Plant Variety and Seed Certification Systems

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the report of the "Review of Plant Variety and Seed Certification Systems"; if he will make it his policy to hold consultations with all interested parties before implementing any of the recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 18 April 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 14 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) at columns 241-42.

Free Food Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount of food which, to date, has been issued to the needy under the free food scheme for each country and each product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1988, c. 563.]: The Council has determined a budgetary allocation of 100 million ECUs for the free food scheme for 1988, within which total the Commission has allocated funds to each member state, and has authorised release as follows:

Member state	Financial limit (MECUs)	Maximum quantities which may be drawn from intervention stores subject for each member state to the overriding financial limit stated

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecutors (Manual of Guidance)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library a copy of the manual of guidance issued to Crown prosecutors in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement as to the criteria upon which a decision to prosecute is based, as set out in the manual.

The Attorney-General: The criteria upon which such a decision is based are set out in the code for Crown prosecutors issued by the Director of Public Prosecutions pursuant to section 10 of the Prosecutions of Offences Act 1985. Copies of that code are available to the public. My predecessor caused a copy to be placed in the Library on 25 June 1986, as he announced in his answer of the same date to the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth). Crown prosecutors are issued also with manuals of guidance. I am discussing with the Director of Public Prosecutions whether it would be proper to cause copies to be placed in the Library.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General if he will state the total costs incurred by (a) his Department and (b) the Lord Chancellor's Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 identified by (i) ministerial travel and (ii) travel abroad by civil servants.

The Solicitor-General: The total costs incurred by (a) the Law Officers' Department and (b) the Lord Chancellor's Department on foreign travel by Ministers and civil servants during the financial year 1987-88 were as follows:

Law Officers' Department
Ministerial travel	4,211
Travel by civil servants	2,550
Lord Chancellor's Department
Ministerial travel	21,707·45
Travel by civil servants	13,507·93

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General at whose initiative the inquiry by the City of London police, arising from the recent appeal hearing of the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings, was established; when was it set up; and what is its remit.

The Solicitor-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions wrote to the commissioner for the City of London police on 30 March 1988 to ask for inquiries to be made, following information received from another police force. The inquiries are not yet concluded.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list current development projects in Angola for which United Kingdom national, Commonwealth or European Community assistance is given; what is the value of that assistance; and if he will specify the means or agencies through which assistance is given.

Mr. Chris Patten: About half our bilateral programme to Angola is devoted to the provision of training in Britain. Within Angola we are currently supporting the following Government projects:

Estimated expenditure 1988-89

	£'000
English language teaching project	61
English teacher education and training programme	109

Development activities currently being financed by the European Community are as follows:

Current commitment

	£million
Sectoral import programme	24·48
Banco Nacional de Angola (BNA) global loan	2·80
Technical assistance for BNA and government officials	0·40
Feasibility studies	0·34
Regional training	0·09
TOTAL	28·11

The United Kingdom share of these EC-financed development activities is approximately £4·64 million.

There is no Commonwealth aid to Angola.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list United Kingdom contributions to Angola through national, Commonwealth and European Community action in each year since 1983.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross bilateral aid and the estimated British share of European Community aid to Angola since 1983 have been as follows:

£'000

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Gross bilateral aid	71	146	164	317
Estimated UK share of EC aid	390	1,510	1,290	1,500

Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

There is no Commonwealth aid to Angola.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the curriculum development of social, political and moral subjects in the national curriculum; and how it will be structured.

Mrs. Rumbold: Many of these themes will be covered by the attainment targets and programmes of study of the core and other foundation subjects; we can expect others to be included in the rest of what schools provide. Their place and development within the school curriculum as a whole, the purposes of which are set out in Clause 1 of the Bill, are matters on which the National Curriculum Council will be able to advise.

Capital Allocations (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received a letter from the Nottinghamshire county council education chairman regarding the county capital allocation for education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received a letter from the chief education officer of Nottinghamshire county council concerning the authority's capital expenditure allocation for 1988-89. A reply was sent on 12 April 1988.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what provision for research into major psychiatric disorders is contained in the Medical Research Council's proposals to develop a new national centre for research and postgraduate medical education;

(2) what provision for research into diseases of the nervous system is contained in the Medical Research Council's proposals to develop a new national centre for research and postgraduate medical education;

(3) what will be the (a) capital and (b) the annual running costs of the Medical Research Council's proposed new national centre for research and postgraduate medical education;

(4) where the Medical Research Council's new national centre for research and postgraduate medical research will be located;

(5) what provision for research into neurological disease is contained in the Medical Research Council's proposals to develop a new national centre for research and postgraduate medical education;

(6) what provision for research into infectious disease and clinical genetics is contained in the Medical Research Council's proposals to develop a new national centre for research and postgraduate medical education.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is in the process of developing proposals, following the Stoker report on the clinical research centre, for a new national centre for multispecialty postgraduate medical education and research based at Hammersmith. I understand that the MRC intends to submit detailed proposals on this to Government later this year.

Teachers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide details of the percentage of black teachers and white teachers by local education authority; what are their percentages in respect of salary scales; what is the percentage who have head or deputy headships; and if he will make a statement on the number of black teachers who are in teacher training.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available. However, as announced by my right hon. Friend on 28

October 1987 at column 261, a draft circular on the collection of this information has been issued for consultation. Additionally, the Department issued a consultative document on 8 March on the collection of ethnically based statistics for students in further and higher education, including those in teacher training.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mrs. Rumbold: The exact costs incurred by this Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 are not yet known but are expected to total some £143,000, as follows:

(a) Ministerial	32,000
(b) Civil Servants:
Her Majesty's Inspectorate	39,000
Officials	72,000

Departmental Votes

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of any revised cash limits for his Department's Votes in respect of university funding in 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit on class XII, vote 3 is being revised to take account of an increase of £3·1 million in respect of pay for clinical academic staff. This increase takes account of the related increase for the hospital and community health service in respect of the recommendations of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body. It is based on the premise that academic staff will be reimbursed in appropriate circumstances through the National Health Service for two thirds of their defence body subscriptions. The effect of the change is as follows:

Class	Vote	Description of expenditure	Current cash limit £000	Revised cash limit £000
XII	3	Universities, etc.	1,840,463	1,843,563

The increase will be charged to the Reserve, so will not add to the public expenditure planning total.

DEFENCE

Air-sea Rescue

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is in a position to make a statement on the future disposition of Royal Air Force and Royal Navy air-sea rescue detachments in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Some parts of our review of the most effective deployment of Royal Air Force and Royal Navy search and rescue helicopters have been completed and announced. Studies into the deployment of the remaining aircraft continue, and I shall tell the House the outcome as soon as possible.

United States Naval Security Group

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the function of the additional operational facilities at the United States naval security group activity, Edzell, Scotland, for which funds of $4·2 million were provided in the United States fiscal year 1988 budget.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I understand that funds were requested by the United States navy to provide an extension to an existing building to provide more space for communications facilities, but that the project has been delayed pending complete funding.

Fleet Requirements and Air Direction Unit

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to replace the Hunter and Canberra aircraft currently in service with the fleet requirements and air direction unit by civilian-registered aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: There are at present no plans to replace these aircraft with civilian-registered aircraft.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Falcon 20DC aircraft are provided to support military training under the terms of his Department's contract with Flight Refuelling Ltd. for the operation of the fleet requirements and air direction unit; and whether the contract gives his Department exclusive use of those aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: There are 16 Falcon 20 aircraft used to support military training. The Department has first call, but use is not exclusive.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Dassault Falcon 20DC aircraft are operated by the fleet requirements and air direction unit; when these aircraft entered service; and which type of military aircraft they replaced.

Mr. Freeman: The fleet requirements and air direction unit operates 16 Falcon 20 aircraft. They entered service between February 1985 and February 1987 and they replaced a number of the Hunter and Canberra aircraft used to support military training.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department's current contract with Flight Refuelling Ltd. for the operation of the fleet requirements and air direction unit expires.

Mr. Freeman: There are three current contracts which expire in 1992.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what responsibility he has for the operation of the fleet requirements and air direction unit.

Mr. Freeman: The Secretary of State for Defence is responsible for the operation of the fleet requirements and air direction unit, which provides a service to national and NATO forces under the control of the flag officer naval air command. It is manned and operated under contract to the MOD by Flight Refuelling Ltd.

Benbecula (Low Flying)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disciplinary action was taken against the aircrew of the United States Air Force F111 aircraft involved in a low-flying incident over Benbecula on 12 September 1983.

Mr. Freeman: Disciplinary action following a breach of flying regulations is a matter for the operation nation. My Department has been informed by the United States authorities that appropriate action was taken with regard to this incident.

RAF Benbecula

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defenc what changes have been made to the regulations governing military flying activity in the vicinity of RAF Benbecula since September 1983.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible without disproportionate effort to list all changes since September 1983 to the regulations governing military flying activity which might have affected flying in the vicinity of RAF Benbecula.

Low-flying Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom aircraft engaged in low-flying military exercises in West Germany below 1,000 m in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available.

Army Vehicles (Lighting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) of 8 February, Official Report, column 81, whether the regulations controlling the use of Army vehicles on public roads in the hours of darkness without lights also apply to vehicles belonging to United States military forces stationed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Sainsbury: The cost of foreign air travel by MOD Ministers and their personal staffs during 1987-88 was approximately £69,000, excluding ministerial use of air transport provided by the RAF which is not separately identifiable.

Records are not maintained in a way which would provide separate information on other forms of travel by Ministers or overseas travel by civil servants. The MOD travel votes cover travel by service men as well as civilians and make no distinction between domestic and overseas travel.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of Government spending is cash limited, and what are the main categories which are not.

Mr. Major: Some £63 billion—just over 40 per cent. of the 1988-89 public expenditure planning total of £156·8 billion—is covered by cash limits. In addition, a further £12 billion of expenditure, which mostly finances expenditure included in the planning total, is covered by cash limits. The main categories which are not subject to cash limits are demand-led services (such as supplementary benefits, where once policy and rates of payments have been determined expenditure depends on factors such as the number of claimants coming forward), local authority current expenditure (although most central Government grants to local authorities are covered by cash limits) and the financing of most public corporations (nationalised industries are subject to external financing limits). The coverage of cash limits is discussed more fully in chapter 3 of the "Supply Estimates 1988-89: Summary and Guide" (Cm 328).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of Government spending is voted by Parliament; and what are the main categories of expenditure outside this.

Mr. Major: The 1988-89 main Supply Estimates seek parliamentary authority for some £83 billion—just over 50 per cent. of the 1988-89 public expenditure planning total of £156·8 billion. In addition a further £25 billion of expenditure in 1988-89 main Estimates will finance payments to bodies whose own expenditure is counted in the planning total. The main categories of expenditure not voted by Parliament are local authority expenditure (although central Government grants to local authorities are included in Supply Estimates), social security expenditure financed directly from the national insurance fund, some payments made direct from the Consolidated Fund, such as contributions to the European Community, and net borrowing by most public corporations. These relationships are set out more fully in the "Supply Estimates 1988-89: Summary and Guide" (Cm 328).

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The Ecofin Council met in Luxembourg on 18 April. I represented the United Kingdom.

The chairman of the Community's economic policy committee presented a preliminary report on economic aspects of the Commission's proposals for abolishing fiscal frontiers. Finance Ministers gave some preliminary views on the report and agreed to discuss the issues further at their informal meeting in May.

In discussion on implementation of the February European Council conclusions on budget discipline, the Council approved in principle a provisional text of a decision on controlling agricultural guarantee and other obligatory expenditure. The Council also agreed possible elements for a draft inter-institutional agreement between the Council, the European Parliament and the Commission on the development of non-obligatory expenditure over the period 1988 to 1992. Negotiations between representatives of the three institutions are due to take place on 22 April.

The Council received reports by the chairmen of the monetary committee and Committee of Central Bank Governors on the Commission's proposals to liberalise capital movements in the Community. The Council identified a number of issues which Finance Ministers will discuss further.

The Council agreed in substance a derogation for a reduced rate of excise duty for imports of DOM rum into mainland France.

Financial Services

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in establishing the regulatory regime for the wholesale markets under section 3 of the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Lilley [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1987, c. 231-32]: The Bank of England has now published a paper setting out in detail how it intends to supervise the wholesale markets in sterling, foreign exchange and bullion, together with a copy of the first list of exempted persons established for the purposes of section 43 of the Financial Services Act. Much of the regime, including the Bank's code of conduct defining best market practice, is now operative, although those aspects directly related to the Financial Services Act will come into effect with that Act on 29 April.

In my written answer of 22 July 1987 to my hon. Friend I set out the conditions that the Bank of England intended to impose for admission to its list, and the arrangements for admission to and removal from it, which had been approved by the Treasury. A small number of technical changes have been made to those conditions and arrangements. The revised version of the conditions and arrangements is set out in the Bank's paper; a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Enemy Assets

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Custodians of Enemy Property are to continue to preserve enemy assets.

Mr. Butcher: The Custodians of Enemy Property were asked three years ago to sell all valuable securities which were vested in them. Efforts have recently been made, with some success, to trace and pay the original owners of vested property and those to whom money was originally due, or their successors in title. The custodians have been from time to time directed to pay into the Exchequer money held in the name of former enemies who could not be traced and this process has now been completed.

If a belated claim is now made, any person who proves himself to be an original owner or creditor, or the successor in title to an original owner or creditor, will be paid out of moneys voted by Parliament the amount paid into the Exchequer. This undertaking does not extend to cases where a foreign Government have agreed to meet claims of this kind by their nationals.

North East Shipbuilders Ltd. (Danish Ferry Contract)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, pursuant to his statement on shipbuilding on 18 April, Official Report, column 554, he has anything further to add on the position of the Danish ferry contract with North East Shipbuilders Ltd.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There has been considerable difficulty with the Danish customer in recent months, arising mainly from the non-payment of instalments. Two weeks ago British Shipbuilders issued a formal demand that the outstanding payments be made by midnight on 20 April. That deadline passed with no payments having been made, and so BS has now cancelled contracts for five of the ferries. North East Shipbuilders will complete the vessels. The other contracts continue as normal.

Voluntary Restraint Agreements

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guarantees have been given to British Aerospace regarding Her Majesty's Government's future policy towards voluntary restraint agreements with Japan on motor vehicles.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether Her Majesty's Government have given any undertakings to British Aerospace about the Government's future attitude to the voluntary restraint arrangement covering cars and commercial vehicles from Japan.

Mr. Atkins: No.

ENERGY

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88, indentified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Parkinson: The estimated costs of foreign travel by my Department in 1978-88 are about £33,000 for Ministers and their immediate staff and £240,000 for other staff, of which £10,800 and £26,700 respectively will be refunded by the EC.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Cinema and Television Year

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to mark the European Community and Council of Europe's European Cinema and Television Year 1988, and particularly, European Cinema Day on 16 June.

Mr. Butcher: The Government are grateful for the energetic efforts of the national committee for European Cinema and Television Year, which I appointed last year, to arrange a small, high-profile series of events backed by our cinema and broadcasting industries to celebrate European Cinema and Television Year in the United Kingdom. I have arranged for copies of the programme of events which they and many other cinema and television interests in the United Kingdom are arranging during 1988 to be placed in the Library of the House.

The celebration of European Cinema Day on 16 June is a matter for individual cinema owners to decide. I understand however that the Odeon cinema chain is planning to celebrate European Cinema Day during the week of 16 June by opening the projection rooms at some of its cinemas to the public.

Togo

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current state of trade relations with Togo; and if he has plans to improve them.

Mr. Alan Clark: The level of United Kingdom-Togolese trade is relatively low (in 1987 United Kingdom imports were £2·6 million; United Kingdom exports were £15·4 million), reflecting Togo's current economic difficulties. However, the country remains a useful market for British exporters and it is hoped that our trading links can be maintained and developed.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 indentified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Butcher: The costs of travel and subsistence allowances incurred by the DTI on overseas visits during 1987-88 was:

	£000
Ministers and staff in their private offices	148
Remainder of the Department	3,611
	3,759

Certain of the costs are recoverable from the European Community and £299,000 was recovered during 1987-88.

PRIME MINISTER

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister what is her normal practice for dealing with mail addressed to her by right hon. and hon. Members; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I receive an enormous number of letters every week — currently some 5,000 — from Members of Parliament and others. It is not possible for me to deal with all these letters personally, and I must accordingly refer most of them to the Minister and the Department with the responsibility for the policy in question.

Business Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister when she last travelled by British Rail on official business.

The Prime Minister: In February 1987.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff Statistics

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the number of staff employed on an agency basis by the House of Commons Commission.

Mr. Beith: Agency staff are employed on a regular basis in the Refreshment Department to replace permanent staff who are absent as a result of illness, and so on. In the main they cover the duties of porters, general assistants and waiters-waitresses. On average, some 21 such agency staff are employed per week during the period when the House is sitting.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will give the number of staff employed by the House of Commons Commission who have left in the last 12 months.

Mr. Beith: The number of staff employed by the Commission who have resigned, retired or died in the 12-month period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988 is 125.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the number of hours of overtime worked by staff employed by the House of Commons Commission in the last year.

Mr. Beith: The information is not available centrally in the form requested and, because overtime is paid at different rates, it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total charge for all overtime paid to House of Commons staff in 1987-88 was £215,503. This figure does not include various night, late duty and shift allowances paid to staff which together amounted to £449,791.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the average hourly rate paid to staff employed on an hourly basis by the House of Commons Commission; and what is the average hourly rate paid to staff employed on an agency basis by the Commission.

Mr. Beith: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will state the total costs incurred by the Privy Council Office on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Wakeham: No costs were incurred by the Privy Council Office on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sergei Zherdev

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has raised with the Soviet authorities the case of Sergei Zherdev; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly make representations to the Soviet authorities on behalf of refuseniks such as Sergei Zherdev. My right hon. and learned Friend again raised the issue of Soviet citizens denied permission to emigrate in February during his talks with Mr. Shevardnadze in Moscow.

Togo

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations with Togo including diplomatic representation; and if he has any plans to improve them.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom enjoys good relations with Togo. The British high commissioner in Accra is also Her Majesty's ambassador to Togo. There are no present plans to change this.

Departmental Achievements

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the main achievements of his Department since 1979 with regard to the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on 19 April.

Chile

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations Her Majesty's ambassador to Chile has made regarding freedom of expression and association in Chile in the period before the elections, and the conditions in which the opposition operate;

(2) what representations he has made to the Chilean Government on the presidential elections with regard to freedom of choice to Chilean citizens and the free conduct of any electoral campaign.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend and I made our views on these matters known directly to the Chilean Foreign Minister last October, as did my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, both privately and publicly, during his own visit to Chile in January. Our ambassador in Santiago also discusses them frequently with the Chilean Government. I refer the hon. Member, additionally, to the statement made by the 12 members of the European Community on 9 October 1987, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. We believe it would help considerably if the Chilean Government lifted the state of emergency in advance of the plebiscite to allow the democratic opposition greater freedom to campaign peacefully.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88, identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Eggar: The forecast outturn for spending on ministerial travel by both wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the financial year 1987-88 is estimated to be £0·8 million and for travel abroad by civil servants £12·2 million. These figures exclude transfer and leave journeys.

UNITA

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he has had any meetings with, made approaches to, or received approaches from Dr. Jonas Savimbi or representatives of UNITA since 1983;

(2) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards UNITA.

Mrs. Chalker: There has been occasional contact with UNITA representatives at official level for humanitarian reasons.

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent diplomatic initiatives seeking an end to the civil war in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We wish to see all foreign troops withdrawn from Angola, and support the United States-led negotiations as the most practical means of ending the civil war.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for stability in Southern Africa of South Africa's policy towards Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: South Africa's present policy towards Angola contributes to instability in Southern Africa. We have called repeatedly upon South Africa to withdraw its forces from Angola and to respect Angola's territorial integrity.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he has recently made any approaches to, or received approaches from, the Soviet Union with regard to a peaceful settlement in Angola;

(2) when he last discussed Angola with the Government of the Soviet Union.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) on 2 March.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has recently made any approaches to, or received approaches from the South African Government with regard to a peaceful settlement in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We regularly point out to the South African Government the need for a peaceful settlement and for the withdrawal of their troops from Angola.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for stability in southern Africa of the Soviet Union's policy towards Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: The Soviet Union is well aware of our view that the stability of the region would be significantly improved by a negotiated end to the war in Angola involving the withdrawal of all foreign troops.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Research and Development

Mr. Doran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received the Barnes report on research and development in the agriculture industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Yes, but in other respects I cannot yet add to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 1 March at column 546.

Forestry Grant

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the area of land approved for foresty grant-aid in each of the six years to 31 March in each county in England.

Mr. Gummer: The information is not readily available by counties, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 13 April, Official Report, column 156, in respect of how many of the 132 incidents of honey bee poisoning in England and Wales arising from the misuse of pesticides, offenders have been detected and prosecuted, and how many of the honey bee owners have sought compensation for the damage to their bees and produce.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 21 April 1988]: While our investigation arrangements are able to determine pathological effect and its causes, they do not directly establish whether a case arose through pesticide misuse or whether an offence has been committed under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. No prosecutions have taken place to date relating to the poisoning of honey bees.

I am unable to say how many of the honey bees' owners have sought compensation for the damage to their bees and produce, since such action falls within the province of the civil law.

Canary Seed, Buckwheat and Millet

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the purpose of the EEC proposal to levy a tax on imported canary seed, buckwheat and millet; what would be the amount of the proposed tax; and whether Her Majesty's Government treat this proposal as falling to be considered under the Single European Act by majority vote.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The Commission is proposing to align import levies on canary seed, buckwheat and millet with those on barley; it has argued that the existing arrangements, under which separate import levies are fixed for each of these cereals, is difficult to monitor, given the limited quantities traded on the world market, and that its proposal would simplify the system. Current rates of levy are £66·83 per tonne for buckwheat, £95·61 per tonne for millet and £42·69 per tonne for canary seed; if the Commission's proposal was adopted all these cereals would be subject to the import levy for barley, which currently stands at £115·23 per tonne. The proposal is made under article 43 of the treaty of Rome, and as such may be adopted by a qualified majority.

EMPLOYMENT

"Training for Employment"

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to paragraph 2.8 of the paper entitled "Training for Employment", if he will publish (a) the breakdown of the 700,000 vacancies by standard region and (b) the breakdown by standard region of the socio-economic, and industrial groups of the 7·5 million recruits; and if he will place a copy of the full report from IFF Research Ltd. in the Library.

Mr. Fowler: Results of the recent survey by IFF Research Limited were published in the April 1988 edition of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library. This includes some analysis by region, and also by occupation, of the approximately 7·4 million vacancies filled during 1987. The nature of the survey limits the scope for more detailed analysis. The estimate of 700,000 vacancies in a typical month cannot be broken down reliably by region because of the seasonal nature of the data collected in January. A full report on the survey is not yet available.

Small Inventory Top Tier Sites

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Health and Safety Executive's estimate of the number of CIMAH small inventory top tier sites, SITTS, which have been removed from liability under the control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations since 1986; how many of the remaining small inventory top tier sites have submitted emergency plans and issued information to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) is not aware of any small inventory top tier sites which have been removed from liability under the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations since 1986.

The HSE is aware of 21 small inventory top tier sites where the occupiers have completed offsite emergency plans and 14 sites where information has been issued to the public.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on age discrimination by employers; and what steps have been taken by his Department to discourage such discrimination.

Mr. Lee: The Government believe that employers should select applicants for jobs on the basis of suitability. Where employers impose age limits, staff in jobcentres and the Professional and Executive Recruitment offices may ask them to consider whether they are justified. However, age can in certain circumstances have a bearing on suitability and employers are normally in the best position to judge if this is so.

Enterprise in Higher Education

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he anticipates announcing the first institution to be involved in the Manpower Services Commission-sponsored Enterprise in Higher Education projects.

Mr. Cope: It is anticipated that an announcement will be made in July.

Companies (Blacklists)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to which companies are blacklisted by the Trades Union Congress.

Mr. Nicholls: None.

YTS

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the qualifications obtained by those trainees on YTS scheme who have stayed into their second year.

Mr. Cope: A list of qualifications obtained by YTS trainees who stayed into their second year is given in the table.

A national survey of trainees who stayed into their second year shows that 98 per cent. of all trainees had trained for a qualification during their first year on the scheme and 54 per cent. of all trainees had gained a qualification. The significant number of trainees gaining qualifications through YTS represents an important step towards the Government's target that all young people should enter the labour market with a qualification.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of black participants get jobs on leaving the YTS.

Mr. Cope: The latest results from the Manpower Services Commission's follow-up survey of all YTS leavers show that 42 per cent. of black participants who left YTS schemes between April 1986 and October 1987 were in jobs at the time of the surveys.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown of the occupations of those on the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: The table shows the breakdown of businesses run by entrants to the enterprise allowance scheme in the 1987-88 financial year.

Business	Percentage
Agriculture, forestry, fishing	2·28
Manufacturing	26·11
Distribution	24·06
Hotels and Catering	0·88

Compact Initiative

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the recent compact initiative was restricted to 12 areas and if he will consider extending it to any area which requests one.

Mr. Cope: We are offering support to 15 inner city compacts (including two in Scotland and one in Wales) in order to test the concept in areas of greatest need. If large numbers of viable proposals are put forward, we shall review the scale of future funding.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what have been the headings of Manpower Services Commission expenditure from 1979 to date.

Mr. Cope: The headings of MSC expenditure from 1979 to date can be found in the Supply Estimates for those years, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all Manpower Services Commission run or funded courses from 1979 to the current date.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission has run or funded a large variety of courses and programmes since 1979. A comprehensive list of all courses and programmes run since 1979 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy towards Manpower Services Commission involvement in industrial relations training.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission is involved in industrial relations training as part of its work in management training and development. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State considers proposals from the Manpower Services Commission on these, and other areas, on their merits.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the relationship between the Manpower Services Commission and the industrial relations training resource centre;

(2) what public funds are provided to the industrial relations training resource centre; and from what sources;

(3) what relationship the Manpower Services Commission has with (a) the Oxford Centre for Management Studies, and (b) the Employee Relations Associates.

Mr. Cope: The Industrial Relations Training Resource Centre no longer exists, but its work is continued by the organisation known as Employment Relations Associates. The Oxford Centre for Management Studies has now been subsumed within Templeton college.

The Commission has contracts with both bodies for management development projects. It is understood that Employment Relations Associates receives no other public funds.

Investment Capital and Industry (North-West)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures and initiatives are being undertaken in the north-west to attract investment capital and industry; and if he will publish a table of capital investment in real terms showing the percentage increase this sum represents from May 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

My Department offers a range of incentives under its recently launched enterprise initiative which are designed to encourage industrial and commercial development in the north-west and elsewhere. The information sought by the hon. Member about capital investment is as follows. For the standard economic planning region of the north-west (which excludes Cumbria) the figures in the table imply the following percentage changes in manufacturing net capital expenditure from the 1979 base year figure of £971 million.

£ million (1979 prices)

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of recent research undertaken amongst drug addicts by the communicable disease surveillance unit in Glasgow, he will now introduce legislation to make the passing of HIV infection knowingly or deliberately a criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: As my hon. Friend is aware, we have considered most carefully whether to propose new offences of this kind. For the present, however, it is still our conclusion that new offences would not materially assist in preventing the transmission of the virus and could discourage potential carriers from coming forward for testing.

Pensioners (Petition)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now issue his observations on the petition from pensioners from Nottingham, North constituency presented to the House on 28 March.

Mr. Renton: As we have made clear to the House on a number of occasions, we do not consider that there is a good case for providing free or concessionary television licences for all pensioners.

Computer Information (Access)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what access (a) police officers, and (b) Government agencies have to copies or originals of (i) computerised logs of telephone calls kept at new digital exchanges, and (ii) computerised logs of calls kept at individual switchboards.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the provisions of the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

EC (Passports)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans for the new EEC British passport to be issued from the Petty France office.

Mr. Renton: Our present plans are for the London passport office to be computerised, and to begin issuing the new version of the British passport, machine-readable, and in the EC common format, from December 1989.

Police Cells (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the numbers of prisoners on remand transferred from London courts to Doncaster police cells; what types of offences they have been charged with; and how many are in each category.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Wednesday 20 April, 24 prisoners remanded in custody by courts in the London area were held in police cells in Doncaster. Ten of these prisoners had been charged with theft, five with burglary, four with robbery and firearms offences, three with occasioning actual bodily harm and two with drug-related offences.

Leeds Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to reduce prison overcrowding in respect of Leeds prison; what information he has about the current level of overcrowding at that prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 19 April 1,354 prisoners were held at Her Majesty's prison Leeds compared with a certified normal accommodation of 642.

Leeds prison, in common with other local prisons, is seriously overcrowded. We have sought to provide such measures of relief as is possible under present circumstances by diverting some remand prisoners elsewhere and by a sustained effort to move convicted prisoners to training establishments as soon as places become available.

In the longer term, Leeds prison will also benefit from the prison building programme. Five hundred and forty-two new places will be provided at the prison in early 1991. As well as providing some additional accommodation, this will enable a programme of refurbishment of the existing blocks to proceed. Redevelopment will be completed by late 1996.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to whether the late Michael Ryan used firearms possessed by police officers of the Thames Valley police on any occasion.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chief constable of Thames Valley has no information to that effect.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call on a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to on how many occasions the Police Complaints Board had submitted requests for files and papers or information to the chief constable in the course of investigating complaints made into events (a) leading up to and (b) involving the shootings by the late Michael Ryan on 19 August 1987, and as to what response he has made, giving dates on which such material was submitted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that the investigation is being carried out under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority; there is frequent discussion between the investigation team and the authority about the course of the investigation and the evidence to be obtained.

Concerts (Codification)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of distress caused to young people who attended Alice Cooper concerts, he will seek powers to require the codification of live performances so that the public and parents may be better informed when deciding whether to attend.

Mr. John Patten: District and London borough councils have power in licensing premises for public entertainment under the Local Government (Miscellaneous) Provisions Act 1982 and the London Government Act 1963, to impose conditions concerning the nature of entertainments permitted on those premises.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88, identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Hurd: The expenditure in 1987-88 was approximately (a) £36,000 by Ministers; and (b) £464,000 by officials.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total numbers of persons who were on temporary admission to the United Kingdom in (a) 1985, (b) 1986, (c) 1987 and (d) since 1 January respectively.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 18 April 1988]: In 1987, a total of 7,517 persons were granted temporary admission to the United Kingdom: information for the first quarter of 1988 is not yet available. The figures for 1985 and 1986 were on a different basis which separately identified those granted temporary admission being further examination, from those granted temporary admission after being refused entry, with the result that those granted temporary admission under both circumstances were counted twice. The figures are as follows; comprehensive data are not available for the first three months of 1985.

Number of passengers granted temporary admission

Year	Pending further examination	After being refused entry
1985 April to December	6,746	6,595
1986	12,414	10,757

Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for visitors' visas, were refused in the United Kingdom posts in (a) Bombay, (b) New Dehli, (c) Dacca, (d) Islamabad and (e) Calcutta in (i) 1985, (ii) 1986, (iii) 1987 and (iv) since 1 January, respectively.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 18 April]: The information requested for 1985-87 is given in the following table; the corresponding information for the first quarter of 1988 is not yet available. Since 15 October 1986, citizens of India, Bangladesh and Pakistan wishing to visit the United Kingdom have been required to obtain a visa before setting out. Before that date, the examination of a passenger's eligibility for entry normally took place on arrival at a United Kingdom port although it was open to a visitor to apply for an optional entry clearance at a post overseas. The increase in refusals of visit entry clearances at posts in the Indian sub-continent since October 1986 has therefore been accompanied by a fall of results at the ports. Congestion at the ports has been substantially reduced, as I explained in answer to a Question from the hon. Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 29 March, column 387.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further action he proposes to take to (a) increase crime prevention measures and (b) reduce the incidence of offences of public order.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 19 April]: A wide range of crime prevention initiatives are successfully underway to both national and local level. The energy and enthusiasm of those concerned is evident and we are determined that this should be further encouraged and that where initiatives are successful in preventing crime and in reducing the fear of crime, experience and good practice is made known to all.

At national level, the ministerial group on crime prevention and the standing conference on crime prevention have important roles in co-ordinating policies and exchanging ideas. The new national crime prevention publicity campaign, launched last month, will run for the next three years. The handbook, "Practical Ways to Crack Crime", launched as part of the campaign, is full of practical crime prevention measures for all members and sectors of the community.

To support and encourage local crime prevention activity, including neighbourhood watch, we will shortly announce details of a new crime prevention organisation.

Our safer cities programme, launched last month as part of the Government's action for cities initiative, will build on and take further a wide range of earlier work which has shown what can be done to prevent crime by concerted and determined local action. Twenty safer cities projects will be established over a three year period in high crime urban areas.

The Public Order Act 1986 strengthened the law on public order in many respects. We have put before Parliament proposals to improve controls on the possession of firearms and shotguns, to prohibit the sale of specified offensive weapons, and to make it an offence to be in possession of a knife in a public place without good reason. We shall continue to strengthen the police to enable them to deal effectively with public order offences as well as other crimes.

Police Raids (Media Notification)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether the London Evening Standard was advised in advance by the Metropolitan police of the raid on alleged Jamaica-based racketeers on the night of 13-14 April; what procedures for prior notification of the media about police activity which may lead to arrests in the presence of representatives of broadcasting and newspapers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the London Evening Standard was advised in advance that a police operation of this kind was to take place. Detailed information on the nature of the operation and the location was not provided to it until the raid occurred.

Decisions of this kind are operational ones for the chief officer concerned. I understand that the Metropolitan Police practice is to give advance notification to the media when, having balanced the need to inform the public against the interests of the individuals involved, this seems the most appropriate course of action.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Chiropody

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the chiropody service;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the chiropody profession.

(3) if he will make a statement on the future of the chiropody profession.

(4) when he intends to reply to the questions tabled by the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East on the future of the chiropody services in January and February; and if he will give the reasons for the delay.

Mrs. Currie: We have been considering various issues concerning chiropody in the light of the comments sought from health authorities on the Cartwright report on the chiropody needs of the elderly, "More Trouble with Feet", published in September 1986. I regret that this has led to a delay in replying to my hon. Friend's earlier questions. I hope shortly to do so more fully, but I should make it clear that, in the absence of agreement within the profession itself, we have no plans for legislation on the issue of protection of title. We have indicated in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" that we see a place for chiropody within the primary care team in future.

Mentally Handicapped and Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the levels of staff employed in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale Health Authority Area working with (a) mentally handicapped and (b) mentally ill patients for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally is as follows:

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what warning his Department makes available to pregnant nurses about the risks of cytomegalovirus in the course of their caring for AIDS patients;

(2) what information he has on the number of nurses infected with cytomegalovirus in the course of their caring for AIDS patients.

Mr. Newton: The scientific advice which the Department has received is that cytomegalovirus does not present an occupational hazard to nurses or other female staff caring for patients with CMV infection, including patients with AIDS.

Studies of hospital nurses working with patients known to be excreting cytomegalovirus have shown no increased risk of infection in these nurses compared with women of similar ages working in other occupations.

The most effective means by which all women, including nurses, who are either pregnant or planning a pregnancy, can protect themselves from infection with cytomegalovirus is by careful attention to personal hygiene, for example, hand washing. This is basic to standard safe working practices for all nursing staff.

National Health Service Buildings and Land

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the buildings and land in the ownership of the National Health Service for which he has given permission to be sold off in the last 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: In the 10 years from 1977-78 to 1986-87 just over 8,000 acres have been sold and some £388 million has been realised. Proceeds for 1987-88 are expected to be in the region of £200 million. Regional health authorities have been directed to carry out the Secretary of State's functions in the acquisition and disposal of land and his permission to sell land is not required. Details of individual sales are not routinely collected centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate expense.

Abortion

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions were carried out in Great Britain in the years 1971, 1981 and 1987 in the following categories: (a) under 16 years, (b) 16 to 19 years, (c) 20 to 34 years and (d) 35 years and over; what proportion was carried out in (i) National Health Service hospitals or (ii) private hospitals or others; and if he will break down this information (x) nationally, (y) regionally and (z) for Don Valley constituency.

Mr. Newton: As data for 1987 are not yet available, the tables show figures for 1986. For reasons of maintaining confidentiality, statistics for constituency wards are not released. The remaining information requested is given in the tables, together with readily available statistics for Doncaster health district and district health authority.

Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Government will ensure, in its review of the National Health Service, that resources to meet the costs of teaching hospitals which relate to their university functions are separated from the main allocations of resources to the district health authorities concerned.

Mr. Moore: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 15 April at column 263. I cannot anticipate the outcome of the Government's review.

Ambulances (Emergency Calls)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for metropolitan and county ambulance authorities, the percentage of emergency calls not meeting response time standards.

Mrs. Currie: Information about the percentage of emergency calls where ambulance authorities meet the response time standards is contained in the package of Health Service indicators produced by the Department. The latest information, for 1986-87, is now in the Library.

RAWP Levels

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the effect on the Nottingham health authority of revising the RAWP allocation formula so that its resources are either frozen or not increased to the 100 per cent. funding level.

Mr. Newton: None.

Project 2000

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he can now make a statement on his response to Project 2000 report on the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting; and if he will make a further statement on the Government's new countrywide campaign to encourage former nurses to return to work and to recruit and retain new nurses.

Mr. Newton: The Government are considering proposals from the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for the reform of nurse education and training. We hope to be in a position to respond in the near future.

The national nurse publicity campaign and the careers literature, videos an exhibition materials produced by the Department are being revised and will be extended to support local activity in regions and districts including campaigns to attract back those nurses who have left the service. I also recently launched the joint DHSS-Nursing Times "Recruit and Retain" campaign which is to run through 1988 with the aim of increasing awareness and understanding of the recruitment and retention challenge and to spread good practice in recruitment and manpower planning among Health Service managers.

Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give figures by regional health authorities of the number of people over 60 years needing nursing care at the end of 1987; what the projected figures are for 1995 and 2000; and if he will make a statement on how he intends to ensure that there are enough nurses of the right quality to care for the elderly in the future.

Mr. Newton: The information requested about the number of people over 60 years requiring nursing care at the end of 1987 and projected figures for 1995 and 2000, is not available. On the question of ensuring that there are enough nurses of the right quality to care for the elderly in the future, I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 18 March 1988 at column 706.

Social Work Training

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration his Department is giving to proposals for changes in social work training; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have been considering, in conjunction with other relevant Departments, proposals put forward by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work. I hope shortly to write to the council's chairman with our views on the most appropriate way to make progress in the improvement of social work training.

Eye Tests

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of exempting all pensioners from the proposed charges for eye tests, over and above those already exempt.

Mr. Newton: We estimate that the additional cost (England) of retaining free NHS sight tests for people of pensionable age who are not otherwise eligible would be approximately £22 million a year.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants in the Sunderland area covered by (a) Dunn house and (b) Phoenix house, have been denied invalidity benefit and required to sign as available for light work in the periods (i) January to April, (ii) May to August and (iii) September to December for the years 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is available only at disproportionate cost. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

Retirement Pension

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value in real terms of the basic retirement pension with effect from 11 April, taking November 1978 as the base and calculated according to the rise in average earnings between then and the latest month for which information is available.

Mr. Scott: If the basic retirement pension had been increased in line with the overall increase in earnings between November 1978 and September 1987, the end of the period measured for the April 1988 uprating, the level of pension in April 1988 would be £47·10.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the additional cost of abolishing the contribution conditions for the basic retirement pension for those aged 65 years or over.

Mr. Scott: The gross additional cost of abolishing the contribution conditions for basic retirement pension for those over state pension age would be about £2,500 million in 1988-89. Figures for those aged 65 or over are not available.

Social Security Act 1986

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will outline in detail what proposals he has for monitoring the implementation and impact of the Social Security Act 1986, which will be carried out directly by his Department or by other research bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The objectives for the reforms enacted by the Social Security Act 1986 were set out in the Government's Green and White Papers, "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. numbers 9517 and 9691). Achievement of these objectives is being monitored using information derived from the Department's statistical and management returns, from expenditure data, from local authority returns and from the family expenditure and general household surveys.

A research project into maternity rights and benefits carried out by the Policy Studies Institute under the joint sponsorship of DHSS, Department of Employment and the Equal Opportunities Commission will start later this year. We also intend to commission independent research to start in spring 1989 into the extent to which the social fund is meeting its objectives and are considering a number of further research projects in other benefit areas.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the increase in the number of persons receiving severe disablement allowance and in its annual cost if the disablement conditions were those prevailing before the inroduction of the 80 per cent. disability test.

Mr. Scott: Up to April 1987 (the latest date for which statistics are available) some 16,000 claims to severe disablement allowance (SDA) had been disallowed because they did not satisfy the 80 per cent. disablement condition. It is not possible to say how many of these people would have satisfied the conditions for the non-contributory invalidity pension which was replaced by SDA in November 1984. The gross annual cost of paying 16,000 claims to SDA would be some £21 million.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total numbers of cancelled operations for the first day of each month for the last six months; and if he will give the reasons for those cancellations.

Mr. Newton: Such information has not been collected centrally in the past. Data on the number of scheduled theatre sessions cancelled are being collected from 1987-88 and figures for that year will be available in September.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest figures for the total number of operations cancelled on 14 March and 15 March, and if he will break that total down into (a) operations cancelled due to the industrial action and (b) operations cancelled for reasons other than the industrial action.

Mr. Newton: I have nothing to add to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Mr. Watts) on 17 March at column 681. Information on cancellation of operations generally is not held centrally.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Moore: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. The total cost incurred by my Department on Foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 was £733,864·53, of which £28,901·34 related to travel by Ministers and staff of the private offices.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations were carried out with health authorities with regard to the availability of extra hospital beds to cater for patients that need nursing care but who are not now able to enter or be discharged from nursing homes because they own or have not disposed of their own house.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The possession of property does not prevent someone from being admitted on a permanent basis to a nursing home, or remaining in a nursing home, but ownership of property valued over £6,000 net will mean there is no entitlement to income support.

SCOTLAND

Environmental Health Departments

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are employed in the environmental health department of each district council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the Department's employees; what child care provision, for school holiday and/or after-school care, is provided for employees' children aged five and over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department does not provide child care facilities and has at present no plans to provide any. It has, however, publicised such facilities provided by others as have come to notice.

Holidays

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any figures for the numbers of Scottish people holidaying abroad.

Mr. Lang: The British Tourist Authority collects information on a United Kingdom basis but separate figures are not available for Scotland.

Tourism

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the annual budget of the Scottish tourist board for the years 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Outturn £ million
1979-80	4·2
1980-81	5·2
1981-82	6·1
1982-83	7·1

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is estimate of the number of tourists who have visited Scotland in the years 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Lang: Estimates from the Scottish tourist board and the the international passenger survey on visitor trips to Scotland since 1979 are as follows:

1986	1·3	11·9	13·2

Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any figures giving a breakdown by nationality of tourists visiting Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Estimates for visitors to Scotland from overseas in 1986 by country of origin are as follows:

	Thousands	Percentage
United States	336	28·9

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what efforts are being made by the Government to progress Scottish tourism.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 24 February at column 233.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the contribution to the Scottish economy by the tourist industry.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated by the Scottish tourist board that visitor spending in Scotland in 1986 was about £1,600 million. On this basis, tourism is estimated to contribute 5 per cent. to Scottish GDP.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the levels of wages and salary being paid in the Scottish tourist industry.

Mr. Lang: Tourism is a diverse industry covering a wide range of occupations. The only information on wages and salaries available to me is that contained in the new earnings survey 1987. Copies of the survey are available in the Library.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a regional breakdown within Scotland of the number of tourists coming to Scotland for holidays.

Mr. Lang: The regional breakdown of visitor trips taken in Scotland in 1986 was as follows:

	[1]Overseas trips thousands	[1]United Kingdom domestic trips thousands
Highlands and Islands	295	2,100
Grampian	125	1,700
Tayside	105	1,200
Strathclyde	430	3,800
Central	50	700
Fife	60	800
Lothian	600	2,300
Dumfries and Galloway	50	650
Borders	30	450
Unspecified	20	—

[1] Figures include multiple trips to regions within Scotland taken as part of one trip to Scotland.

Timber

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 361, if he will state the number of persons employed in (a) sawmilling, planing and so on of wood, (b) manufacture of semi-finished wood products and further treatment and processing of wood and (c) pulp, paper and board, in Scotland, England and Wales, respectively.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is in the table.

	Employment
	Scotland	England	Wales
Sawmilling, planing etc of wood	4,400	18,200	[1]—
Manufacture of semi-finished wood products and further processing and treatment of wood	500	3,900	[1]—
Pulp, paper and board	5,700	24,300	[1]—

[1] Figures cannot be given without disclosing information relating to individual firms.

Source: Annual Census of Production, 1985.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 361 to what factors he attributes the difference between the figure quoted of 10,600 people employed in Scotland in the pulp, paper and timber industries in 1985, and that of 2,600 employed in the wood processing industries in Scotland, quoted by the Forestry Commission in its publication "Forestry Facts and Figures 1985-86".

Mr. Lang: The figure of 10,600 is drawn from survey information obtained in the annual census of production and includes all employees in plants classified to the pulp, paper and timber industries in Scotland in 1985. The figure of 2,600, quoted by the Forestry Commission, is an estimate of those employees engaged in plants reliant on Scottish grown wood. Thus, for example, if paper mills in Scotland used imported raw materials or recycled waste paper in 1985, their employment is excluded from the Commission's figure, as is employment in plants which may have used a mix of home-grown and imported raw materials.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88 identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1987-88 foreign travel expenditure in my Department amounted to:

Ministers	19,759
Civil Servants	160,090
Total	179,849

TRANSPORT

Motorways (Repair and Maintenance)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what instructions his Department gives to deter those working on the repair or maintenance of the United Kingdom motorway system from running across the motorway lanes in front of oncoming traffic; whether he is satisfied that those instructions are adequately enforced; and whether he has received any representations on this subject.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 the health, safety and welfare at work of employees and their supervision is the responsibility of each employer. In addition, it is the duty of every employee while at work to take care for the safety of himself and others.

Enforcement of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act is the responsibility of the Health and Safety Executive.

Advice on this subject in relation to trunk roads and motorways is given in a departmental advice note TA 2/79 and in a joint report published in 1985 by the Department and the County Surveyors' Society. A copy of each has been placed in the Library.

We have also received a letter on this subject.

Road Accidents

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the (a) projected and (b) recorded numbers of road fatalities and casualties in the United Kingdom for 1987; and what equivalent information he has about other EEC countries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No projections are made of casualties in road accidents. Final data for 1987 are expected to be available by July. The number of people killed in road accidents in the United Kingdom in 1987 is provisionally estimated to be 5,300, with total casualties at 318,000.

Road accident casualty data for other European Community countries for 1987 are not yet available. The relevant data for 1986 are shown in the table:

European Community comparisons of road casualties: 1986

	[1]Killed	[2]Injured	Total
United Kingdom	5,618	325,275	330,893
Belgium	1,951	79,861	81,812
Denmark[3]	771	13,809	14,580
Federal Republic of Germany	8,948	443,217	452,165
France	11,947	258,029	269,976
Greece	1,625	27,328	28,953
Irish Republic	389	8,327	8,716
Italy[3]	7,629	217,603	225,232
Luxembourg	79	1,904	1,983
Netherlands	1,529	50,081	51,610
Portugal[3]	2,460	38,888	41,348
Spain	7,045	135,519	142,564

[1] In accordance with the commonly agreed international definition, most countries define a fatality as being due to a road accident if death occurs within 30 days of the accident. The official road accident statistics of some countries, however, limit the fatalities to those occurring within shorter periods after the accident. Deaths in the above table have been adjusted according to the factors used by the Economic Commission for Europe and the European Conference of Ministers of Transport, to represent standardised 30-day deaths. Those countries with adjusted fatality data are: Spain, France, Greece, Italy and Portugal.

[2] Because of differences in the definition and the quality of collection in different countries, injury statistics are not as reliable an indicator of road safety trends as death statistics.

[3] 1985 data.

Motorway Accidents

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents were reported on British motorways during (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987 which were caused by loose items, debris or loads shed from goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Stats 19 road accident reporting system does not collect data on the causes of road accidents. While accidents are recorded that involved a dislodged vehicle load, the system does not identify the type of vehicle from which the load was dislodged, or whether it was, itself, involved in the accident.

Data for 1987 are not yet available. However, the number of accidents on motorways in Great Britain which involved a dislodged vehicle load in the carriageway, are given in the table.

	1985	1986
Fatal	2	1
Serious	8	4
Slight	25	30
Total	35	35

Aircraft (Deicing)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents of blocks of ice falling from aircraft were reported in each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand from the Civil Aviation Authority that the number of reported incidents in the United Kingdom was as follows:

	Number
1983	15
1984	27
1985	15
1986	22
1987	18

A47(T)

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest traffic flow figures on the A47(T) road in Cambridgeshire (a) in total, and (b) or different categories of vehicle, as available; and at what level of traffic flow the provision of a dual carriageway would be considered by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1987 the average annual daily flow ranged from 8,000 to 38,000 vehicles. A detailed analysis by vehicle type for the whole route is not available. The proportion of HGV's ranged from 10 per cent. to 20 per cent. Departmental standards require that dual carriageways should be considered as one of the options for a road scheme when traffic flows are forecast to exceed 11,000 vehicles per day 15 years after the road is expected to open. The standard finally selected will also have regard to economic justification and environmental impact.

Vehicle Flows

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the trunk roads and motorways completed in the last 10 years where average daily vehicle flows are respectively below and above his Department's forecasts made at the time of authorisation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has systematically monitored the accuracy of forecasts for trunk road (including trunk motorway) schemes for which orders were published in 1981 or later. Of 47 road schemes which have been open to traffic for more than 12 months, and for which counts of actual traffic have been compared with the forecast for that year, more than half were within 20 per cent. of the forecast. Errors below that level are statistically not significant because of the errors inherent in translating a count of one day's traffic into an annual figure. Only 5 per cent. of schemes had differences greater than 40 per cent. between the forecast and actual traffic counts. In all these cases traffic had been substantially overestimated on assumption about events which subsequently took a different course. The smaller errors were in both directions and there is no evidence of any systematic error in the forecasting methods used.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of breakdowns in air traffic control computers over the last 12 months; and what were the numbers in the previous 12 months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The CAA is wholly responsible for all aspects of aviation safety regulation and (with the Ministry of Defence) for the provision and operation of air traffic services in the United Kingdom. The authority says that the number of failures in its two main air traffic control computer systems in the last 12 months and the previous 12 months were as follows:

	LATCC[1]		ScOATCC[2]
	1988-1987	1987-1986	1988-1987	[3]1987-1986

Software failures	5	4	21	—
Power supply failures	0	4	—	—
Total[4,5]	7	9	23	—

[1] London Air Traffic Control Centre.
[2] Scottish and Oceanic Air Traffic Control Centre.
[3] Scottish computer system became operational April 1987.
[4] Failures which resulted in ATC Flight Plan Processing Systems reverting to manual operation.
[5] LATCC total represents 0·16 per cent. of the time for 1988-87 and 0·17 per cent. for 1987-86. ScOATCC total represents 1·73 per cent. of the time for 1988-87.

A21 (Pembury Bypass)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the contractual opening date and expected actual opening date for the A21 Pembury bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The contractual completion date is 23 May. The contractor expects the bypass to be ready for use on 6 May.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88, identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest estimate of expenditure by the Department on foreign travel during 1987-88 is:

(a) Ministers	50,700
(b) Civil Servants	1,236,556

The figures include the cost of subsistence which is not recorded separately.

ENVIRONMENT

Michael Forsyth Associates

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all contacts by (a) Ministers in his Department and (b) civil servants in his Department with representatives of Michael Forsyth Associates, Michael Forsyth Ltd. and subsidiaries thereof, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ridley: I am not aware of any official contracts with these firms in the last five years. I am however, grateful to two Ministers in my Department for having addressed conferences organised by Political Relations, a subsidiary of Michael Forsyth Associates.

Joint Boards

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each joint board their precepts for 1987-88 and 1988-89 and the percentage change between the two years.

Mr. Chope: The table gives the available information for each joint board:

Housing Co-operatives (Islington)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the reasons for his refusal of the application made by Islington borough council 1986 under the Housing and Planning Act 1986, for financial assistance for the appointment of two housing co-operative development officers to assist the establishment of housing co-operatives in the borough.

Mrs. Roe: The guidelines issued by my Department for housing management grant under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 indicate that grant will not normally be available towards expenditure which could be funded by local authority main programmes. As the application from Islington borough council was in support of two development officers in its own co-ops section, approval was not given. Our priority is to support non-statutory organisations offering advice to tenants groups.

Football League Chairmen

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last attended a meeting of the 92 Football League club chairmen; what issues were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have not attended a meeting of the 92 Football League chairmen. I hold regular meetings with the president of the league and other football authorities at which measures to combat hooliganism are reviewed.

Local Authority Charging

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now proposes to give effect to his intention, announced in his statement of 24 July 1987, Official Report, column 275, to permit the introduction of new local authority charging.

Mr. Chope: It has become clear that it will not be possible to add the necessary provisions to the Local Government Finance Bill, now before Parliament. It remains our intention to introduce such a power at the next appropriate legislative opportunity.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name the first housing action trusts to be set up; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland) on 16 March 1988 at column 598.

Foreign Travel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total costs incurred by his Department on foreign travel during the financial year 1987-88, identified by (a) ministerial travel and (b) travel abroad by civil servants.

Mr. Ridley: Total costs incurred by my Department on foreign travel are no longer monitored separately from United Kingdom travel.

London Residuary Body (House Sales)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the price received by the London residuary body for the seaside and country houses sold to North British Housing Association.

Mr. Chope: £20·2 million.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 14 April, Official Report, column 232, if he will give a breakdown of the expenditure on (a) furnishings and (b) decoration at No. 10 Downing street in 1987-88, for all items of over £500.

Mr. Chope: Up to 31 March 1988 expenditure in 1987-88 on furnishings and decorations at No. 10 Downing street for all items over £500 was as follows:

(a) Furnishings
Glass-fronted bookcase	500·16
Re-upholstery	727·85
Re-covering settee	731·99
Berber carpet	560·44
(b) Decorations
Internal decorations	2,300
Internal decorations	4,133·07

Oval Cricket Ground

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last discussed the future of the Oval with representatives of Surrey county cricket club.

Mr. Moynihan: I had a number of discussions with representatives of the club before Christmas, about the question of financing the redevelopment of the Oval. I told them that I thought that it should be possible to increase the offer of private sponsorship which they had previously received and that I would give any help that I could in this respect. I subsequently contacted a number of potential private sponsors, and related to these discussions, a substantially larger offer of sponsorship was made to the club. I understand that the club may now be on the point of agreeing an arrangement with the company concerned along the lines I discussed with the company. I am glad that I was able to help in these discussions and I am grateful for the helpful role which my hon. Friend himself played. I wish the club and the sponsors well.

Housing Subsidy (London)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the housing subsidy paid to each London borough metropolitan district and non-metropolitan district in each of the years from 1978-79 to 1988-89 (estimated), expressed in constant 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 April 1988]: I am placing in the Library the information requested for the years 1981-82 to 1988-89 inclusive. Information for the years before 1981-82, when the present housing subsidy system came into operation, cannot be provided except at undue cost.

Homelessness

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish the research and conclusions of the work on homelessness commissioned by his Department from the University of Birmingham's centre for urban and regional studies.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The project is not yet completed. I will keep the hon. Member in touch with developments.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 131

SESSION 1987–88

12th April–22nd April 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
